Promised Time for Restoring Order is at Hand.

Mexico City, March 5.—Firm and energetic rule under the leadership of the new Mexican government leader and president General Victoriano Huerta will be inaugurated this week. Huerta has had eight days of conference with his ministers and with the military commissioners sent by them.

The government is more disposed to consider as irreconcilable all those rebels who refuse to accept the definite recognition of the new order of things.

Huerta Faces Severe Test.

The program of pacification will, it is expected, be put to some severe tests.

While the federal government expresses itself as ample to cope at once in the northern states, a lack of harmony between the various factions of rebels in that region was developed on a call several days of representatives of Orozco and other chiefs.

"Movie" Ushers Get Riches.

Spokane, Wash., March 5. — One small moving picture theatre in Spokane employs two ushers, both of whom have fallen heir, one successful in the settlement of the estate of Hatfield, 19 years old, has received word that his lawyers have been successful in securing for him estates in England left by his grandfather, Lord John Hatfield, valued at a legacy of between $250,000 and $500,000 The government's suit against Albert C. Frost and five others charged with fraud in connection with Alaskan coal lands was dismissed by Federal Judge Landis until Thursday.

Italy Prepares for War.

Genaw, Switzerland, March 5.—The Italian government has joined the rest of the European continental powers in making military preparations. It has ordered the mobilization of troops on Swiss frontier, and military engineers are engaged in fortifying many points commanding the passes from the month of the Simplon tunnel toward the east. Chambers for mines have been excavated at the Italian entrance to the Simplon tunnel and filled with secret electrical connections.

Alaskan Legislature Meets.

Juneau, Alaska, March 5.—The first Territorial Legislature is meeting here in Elks hall. The body is composed of eight senators and sixteen representatives. Half of the members are miners. Bills will be introduced providing for an eight-hour day; mechanics lien; protection of land depositors; a territorial board of health and inspection of salmon canneries. Memorials to Congress asking for railroad construction, opening of coal lands and other relief will be adopted.

S. D., Merchant Released from Prison.

Leavenworth, Kan., March 4.—J. C. Cantonwine of Armour S. D., known as the Missouri river pirate, was released from the federal prison after serving three years and one month of a four-year sentence. Cantonwine was convicted of counseling property from a trustee after he had gone into voluntary bankruptcy. Armour will testify in the case against his alleged backers who, he said, were responsible for the confiscation of his entire property.

Mexicans Held as Plotters.

Mexico City, March 1.—That the investigations are being conducted to determine the responsibility for the death of Madero and Pino Suarez are tending to support the official statements made in an attacking party, is indicated by the arrest of Jose Zamarcona and five others alleged to have been members of the party which attempted to rescue the former president and vice president. Complicated with the representativa of the rebels, especially the Zapatistas, continue, with varying success.

hasn't be too sure about spring. Sometimes the birds are just as poor prognosticators as the weatherman.

The army of office seekers at Washington cannot be described as bloodthirsty, but they are a hungry bunch.

Now that the siege of the army of office seekers is on, there is not so much interest in that little mass down in Mexico.

The scramble for patronage is not to be wondered at. The faithful of the "unwashed" do not often have an opportunity for recognition.

If the new president is to make good on the statement that his cabinet is "all progressive," he should insist that one of his secretaries get a shave.

If, as the bankers say, the new tariff proves do not "stack up" well, it is possible that some of the wealth of the country will be stacked about.

If a political campaign were not four years off, you'd think the fellows who are wearing their hair that way were members of a La Follette club.

This season the big stick man in the team will, when the pitcher gets it in the groove, "fling the bulb", the rugger-mouthed fan is to be disappointed. Do you "get" that?

It is evident that the debates of office of the White House cow is not dependent upon civil service rules. Pauline has been compelled to go back to the farm and become an ordinary cow.

St Cloud Journal Press: President Taft placed the American troops close to Mexico so that President Wilson can use them if the necessity arises. This is some different from the way Buchanan acted toward Lincoln.

The St. Paul policemen who butted into the senatorial poker game at the Merchants hotel now say that it was a most annoying mistake and that they were after a "real" poker game. The senators no doubt appreciate that explanation, but it should not induce the unsophisticated to seek a little social game in the senatorial retreat.

It is certain that several hundred bills introduced in the legislature will never come up for final consideration. It is also certain that we can get along quite as well without some of the legislation proposed.

UNITED DOCTORS.

The "United Doctors" is not a professional organization. It is a business concern originated and owned practically by one man. The "celebrated specialists" which this company claims to have are professional reincarnies hired at a small salary instead of being men of unusual ability, most of these employees are graduates of low-grade medical schools, men with limited experience, who have been unable to earn a living legitimately and who are willing to accept the small wages paid by the proprietor of the "United Doctors" to pose as world renowned specialists. These somewhat startling statements are made by The Journal of the American Medical Association which box recently published a lengthy article containing the results of its investigation of the imposition on the public. According to The Journal, the "United Doctors" company is owned by Ben W. Kinsey who graduated from Jenner Medical College (at that time a low grade night school at Chicago) in 1904. After a few months with "Phenomenal Krum," Kinsey evidently decided to start out for himself. In 1906, under the name of "The Hot Springs Doctors," he began the establishment of so-called "institutes" in Ottumwa, Ia; Lincoln, Neb., Topeka, Kan., and elsewhere, claiming that he was a specialist, who, as a result of scientific research, could give to any home the same remedy that could be obtained from a trip to Hot Springs, Ark. He modestly described himself as "better known among the ailing sufferers in the medical profession as the man with the x-ray eye on account of his marvelous skill in locating and curing diseases." Apparently he had developed the x-ray eye lacked a few years after leaving his medical school. In 1909 he changed the name and methods of his concern and operated under the name of "United Doctors." The plan generally followed is to send two or three "directors" to a city in which it is planned to establish a branch. These men have not obtained, as all, but are simply hired pressagents. They first claim that it is their intention to purchase land and erect a building. Later they announce that they have changed their minds and will lease offices. The usual lot of advertising follows, in which claims of "celebrated specialists," "free treatment," "superior equipment," and other fallacious statements are made to attract business. Kinsey and one of his hired men, Dr. Fletcher T. Riley, were indicted in Milwaukee in 1910 for the publication of obscene matter. Kinsey was convicted on the first charge and plead guilty on the second. Other indictments for similar violations of the law are still pending against him in Wisconsin. Investigation of the men whom Kinsey employs shows that most of them have unsavory records. Business men desiring to know of the standing of this concern can secure interesting information from the Retail Business Men's Association of Wheeling, W. Va., or the Commercial Club of Beloit, Wis. The concern seems to be an ordinary advertising company with no more claim to call themselves specialists than any of the other medical frauds and swindles which impose on the people.

ballots and party disorganization publicity is looked upon as the medium for the explanation of all things conducive to the happiness and comfort of the common people, but from such a thing as overdoing it. That is what the St. Paul chamber of commerce did in the campaign of full page advertisements in the Twin City dailies and it was the Canadian reciprocity tariff bill as the result of its efforts. The whole thing simply brought the country end of the game up standing and it pounded away with results as stated. No one concentrances gunshine methods, even if the cause is a good one, but here is a tip whoo things legislative is involved: Don't raise a hue and cry work quietly, convince your men, and above all don't tell him that any particular section will be rutted beyond redemption if a few prvails. This does not mean the use of money or the giving of lavish entertainment. Such methods were popular at one time, but they day has passed. An parnot don't care hoe open worry beat a nills.

Iowa has the one Western state with a distance law and the Canadian act while pastoned after it to a measure, is said to be much different. H. H. Dunn of Albert Lea, who is fathering the bill in the house, says it is not a discrimination act. A per mile per ton rate, he says, is really the basis and not discrimination, no matter whether the load is a pound or a ton. The general impression is that so many miles over which freight is carried is the basis of charge, the distance being divided into units. Iowa, as stated, has had a distance tariff for years and the opponents of the measure point it out as a "joy" state in consequence. They say it has retarded the growth of all terminal centers and scattered the working and business interests of the state.

The house is now on the Minnette Schwerr-Holmberg telephone bill by an overwhelming vote and unless unexpected complications arise it will be given a favorable report by the senate. Only three votes were recorded against the bill, a few by other body and they were by city members. The bill calls for a low rate for farmer lines divided into units. Iowa, as stated, has had a distance tariff for years and the opponents of the measure point it out as a "joy" state in consequence. They say it has retarded the growth of all terminal centers and scattered the working and business interests of the state.

Newspaper libel bills galore have found their way into the senate and house hoppers and is the subject press dose not want to have its efforts to wreras public clesolioss and municipal and legislative farm hampered it will have to get busy. All the bills are directed at removing the lid for damage that can be collected for libel and in one case the right of retraction is taken away. James Handlan, a St. Paul member, is fathering one of these bills to the senate, and W. R. Dindorf, one of the leaders in the house. The latter calls for a constitutional amendment.

The St. Paul papers are held to be responsible in a measure for the new libel lave now before the two houses. They were particularly active during the progressive campaign of last year and candidates who did not come up to their way of thinking were hounded over the coals and their defeat recommended. Handlan and Dindorf were among this number. There was a retraction in the case of one, but vengeance has burned within him ever since, hench his activity. That these bills will get by the two houses is not likely, but it has to be said that many favor them.

There will not be a state land department separate from the state auditor's office, as advocated by Governor Eberhart. The house gave the Knudsen bill, providing for such a department, its quietus. Upstate members were generaly for it.

What Does the Test Mean?

By J. O. RANKIN, University Farm, St. Paul.

In a recent number we gave directions for making a germination test of seed corn. By this time our readers no doubt have the test made and the next question is one of interpreting the test or knowing just what sorts to discard.

It is pretty generally agreed that it will not pay to plant any ears unless at least nine out of every ten kernels germinate strongly in the testing. If the test has been carefully conducted, there is a better chance for strong germination in the lot than the test is likely to find under field conditions where temperature and moisture and seed beds are not so thoroughly under control. The next question is what kernels in the test we regard as strong. The accompanying photograph will help to answer this question. The kernel on the right has germinated as it should and shows good development of both stem and root. The one in the middle has no stem and it should be discarded as strong in development. The one on the left cannot be regarded as strong, because its root has not appeared. Of course, all three of the kernels shown here will sooner or later show both root and stem, but only that which makes a prompt, vigorous start should be retained for the nine or ten strongly germinating kernels which we intend to use for seed.

Hog Cholera Notes.

By DR. M. H. REYNOLDS, University Farm, St. Paul.

Only veterinarians in state employ are allowed to use hog cholera virus in Minnesota. Any competent veterinarian may use the serum-only method.

Pregnant sows may be safely treated by the serum-only method to prevent contact cholera, up to within a few weeks of farrowing. Such sows should, of course, be handled quietly and vaccinated while in a standing position.

Hog cholera does not depend upon kinds of feed or methods of feeding, excepting that over-feeding seems to favor development of the disease. Show hogs and fat hogs in general are especially susceptible. Slightly undersized pigs probably the little sufer from infection, when chances is near.

The state veterinarian of Ohio, who has had experience in managing a large hog cholera serum plant for several years, estimates that his state would require an appropriation of several million dollars annually, and for a period of several years to accomplish anything like actual eradication of cholera.

Kansas has a state hog cholera serum plant in operation that is capable of producing about 25,000 doses per week and there are lower twenty commercial plants in and around Kansas City. All combined have been unable to furnish the amount of serum needed for that section of the country during the past two years.

The losses from hog cholera in Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Minnesota and other states, have been so serious during a period of several years that it must materially affect the hog supply in the country and prices for the near future. Several of these states estimate their percent annual losses by the millions of dollars.

The germs of hog cholera are not readily destroyed by mere cold, but appear to be injured more by frequent changes of freezing and thawing. Infected yards and pens are not usually considered safe except after most thorough disinfection, or at least six months after the last sick hog has died or fully recovered. It should also be borne in mind that an animal may carry in its body and distribute the germs of a given disease without being sick itself.

Serum-only treatment of healthy, unexposed hogs, gives immediate protection against cholera, but protection which lasts only a very few weeks. Serum-only treatment, in sick herds gives permanent protection, as a rule. The only way to get permanent protection for healthy, unexposed hogs by the serum method is by serum combined with virus inoculation or serum with clear pen exposure with sick or dead hogs, or by virus. With the serum-virus method there is always a possibility of producing an inoculation cholera, the loss in healthy herds averaging about 2.4 per cent.

The old rule of improving the human race by legislating with the grandparents applies also to poultry raising.

WINTER SPRAYING

Lime-Sulphur the Best Scale Insecticide Known.

When we speak of winter spraying we speak of a spray that is put on the trees during the dormant season. This spray may be put on just after the leaves drop in the fall, or it may be put on during a warm day in winter, or just before the buds break in the spring. Probably the spring dormant spraying is the best.

There are several sprays that may be called dormant sprays, of which copper-sulphate, crude petroleum and lime-sulphur are typical. At the present time, however, in speaking of dormant sprays, we almost always refer to the lime-sulphur wash. Lime-sulphur is the best scale insecticide known; it also kills many eggs of plant lice. Besides being an insecticide, it is also a fungicide, killing the spores of such diseases as scab, plum pocket, etc. The dormant spray is made quite strong. The following is a formula for a dormant spray which is called the home-made boiled mixture:

Stone lime, fifteen pounds.
Flowers of sulphur, fifteen pounds.
Water, fifty gallons.

Slake the lime in a small quantity of hot water, add the sulphur gradually, keep stirring until it is thoroughly mixed. Dilute this mixture to fifty gallons and boil one hour. Use only iron bottle, or tank of steam in a barrel for boiling purposes. Add sufficient water to make the required fifty gallons. Strain through burlap to a fine mesh strainer and apply hot.—F. L. Washburn, Entomologist, University Farm, St. Paul.

INCUBATOR AND BROODER

Necessities Where Fowls Are Raised in Large Numbers.

A good hen is a better hatcher than any incubator men has yet devised, but for raising fowls in large numbers an incubator is a necessity and a wise investment. Follow the directions that come with the incubator, always with the addition of common sense and judgment. The incubator should be disinfected between hatches.

The brooder and pens should be perfectly clean when the chicks are put in, and supplied with plenty of fresh air. The brooder should supply an opportunity for the chicks to select their own temperature. They will do this when a day old. Chicken will never forget the place where it has found protection and comfort, and will return there naturally. It also instinctively seeks a higher place, as the source of heat in a brooder should be above the level of the floor. A temperature of 100 degrees should be maintained. More chicks probably die from lack of heat, the tendency to get away from it, than from improper feeding.

The floor of the brooder should be kept covered with dry soil and fine litter.—Alice McPeek.

PURE SEED.

Red River Valley Farmers Should Secure Seed From Crookston.

The farmers of the Red River Valley and Northwestern Minnesota may secure "pure bred" pedigreed seed wheat, oats and barley from the Northwest Experiment Station at Crookston for starting pure seed plots on their own farms. Send to the station for information regarding this pure seed work. Nothing will repay the farmer so well as to use the best seed possible and to improve his seed by selection from a pure seed plot. In three years' time it will be possible to have your farm sown to improved seed. The Northwest Experiment Station is ready to assist farmers in that part of the state to do this work.—O. S. Reitz, Superintendent Northwest Experiment Station, Crookston, Minn.

Ears selected for hatching should be typical of the variety represented in shape, normal in size, uniform in color and of good vitality. Avoid the extremely short ear, as such are generally crooked—frequently the cob will be fine. The vitality decreases with age, even under the most favorable conditions.

Maple Sirup and Sugar.

A Possible Byproduct From Minnesota Farms.

According to the United States census reports Minnesota produced in 1909 over eleven thousand pounds of maple sugar and over seventeen thousand gallons of sirup. Many Minnesota farms possess woodlots or groves which might produce maple sugar. Some of these groves are large enough to produce sugar for market, while others can only provide sugar and sirup for home consumption.

Most of the sugar groves in Minnesota need improvement. Old diseased trees should be made into cordwood, competing species of trees that are of little value should be removed, young maple groves thinned, or trails cut to aid in the collection of the sap. All of these things can best be done in the winter or in early March.

The time is also in excellent time to overhaul and repair all old equipment and to order new supplies, such as buckets and covers, spouts, cans, evaporator and tanks.

In estimating the supplies of various sorts that will be required it should be remembered that an average tree produces from ten to twenty gallons of sap in a fair season, and that this amount of sap will make about three pounds of sugar, or about three gallons of sirup.

Those having maple groves should write to the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., for Farmers' Bulletin 616 for full information on the subject.—H. H. Flint, Minnesota College of Forestry, University Farm, St. Paul.

Which Cleak?

At the Wisconsin state-fair visitors were invited by the sign, "In Which Class Are Your Cows?" over four piles of butter, one of which represented the yearly product from an exceptionally good cow and included thirteen sixty pound cubes and twenty-two pounds besides. Next was a pile of the same size from cows, three tubs and twenty pounds for the average cow and two tubs for the state herd—herd of which produces eighty pounds less than

WHY WE WELCOME THE SMALL ACCOUNTS

Banks quite frequently accept deposits and handle accounts which, because of their small amount, represent a distinct loss in clerical time and labor.

Nevertheless, this bank has long since adopted the plan of inviting the small depositor to transact his business with us in the hope that the assistance this bank can render his business will in time develop his account into a large and profitable one.

There are other reasons, too. A large volume of small business furnishes ideal conditions for safe banking because the greater number of people this bank can serve, the greater its assurance to the community.

And small deposits make it possible for us to make small loans and a large number of small loans, from a standpoint of safe banking, is preferable to a few large ones.

won in an open contest in which all separators were allowed to enter, embracing fifty consecutive runs, lasting over thirty days and covering milk from ten different breeds.

You would not expect to buy the best cow in a herd for the same price as the poorest cow. Neither would you sell your most productive cow at as cheap a price as your least productive cow. So it is with the United States Cream Separator.

The United States Cream Separator won the Grand Prize (highest award) at Seattle, 1909, the Gold Medal at the California State Fair, 1911, the only award on cream separators at the Utah State Fair, 1912; while the dairy products of the U. S. not only won the Gold Medal at the National Dairy Show, Chicago, October 24-November 2, 1912, but have been awarded other Gold Medals, Silver Cups and First Prizes without number.

The daily work of the United States Cream Separator in the agricultural colleges and on hundreds of thousands of farms backs up its reputation as closest skimming cream separator.

Prof. Haecker, of Minnesota Agricultural College, says:

St. Anthony Park, Jan. 10, 1912.

We have used the United States Cream Separator at the Minnesota Dairy School of Agriculture for more than fifteen years, and we have always found them to be standard machines, not only doing first-class work, but very durable and rarely requiring repairs.

T. L. HAECKER,
Professor of Dairy Husbandry, in charge.

Professor Mortensen, of Iowa State College, says:

Iowa State College, Ames, Iowa, Feb. 12, 1912.

We have operated one of the Interlocking Style and are pleased to inform you that we consider it to be a high class machine. It is operated with ease and is a close skimmer. It has in every respect given good satisfaction.

Professor of Dairying.

The 1913 model U. S. is Operated with HALF THE POWER of older models

Important improvements have made the 1913 model United States Separator one of the lightest running cream separators made.

The skimming area of the U. S. skimming device has been nearly doubled enabling the latest models to skim practically twice as fast. This double capacity of the bowl has permitted the reduction of the bowl diameter nearly one-half without reducing the capacity. The bowl in the 1913 model United States is one of the smallest as well as easiest running used in separators.

Improved gear construction. The angle of the gear teeth determines the effectiveness of the power applied at the crank. A new slant in the gear teeth enables all the power applied on the crank to be used in turning the bowl. The weight of the handle alone starts the U. S. Separator.

Bear in mind that not only can any child or woman easily do the skimming with the light running United States Separator but that this quality is wholly due to improved construction and in no way to a weakening of its famous wearing qualities.

Ex-President National Dairy Show.

I do not see how one could get a better separator than the "United States" if they all work as this one does. I am satisfied with it in every respect and take pleasure in recommending it to my friends.

COLON C. LILLIE,
Lillie Farmstead, Coopersville.

"Easiest Running Machine There Is."

I purchased a 1915 model United States Cream Separator of Santa Bros. & Company a few months ago, and it is the easiest running machine there is. The new bowl has the best skimming device made. I will further state that the new U. S. Separator can be cleaned in half the time needed in most any other separator.

MRS. FRANK LOSCHEN, Washburn, Ill.

Leading Wisconsin Farmer says:

I am separating the milk from thirty six cows with one of your No. 14 Interlocking Separators and am very well pleased with the work it is doing. One thing that I am especially well pleased with is that it will separate its rated capacity, do good work and produce a uniform density of cream. It is very simple to operate and one of the easiest separators to wash and keep clean there is on the market. I certainly recommend the Interlocking Separator to any prospective purchaser.

T. E. ANDERSON,
Tomah, Wis.

Make more money You are going to run some separator twice a day. If it does not skim clean you are not making all the money that actually belongs to you. If it is hard to run or difficult to wash you are doing unnecessary work for which you are getting absolutely no return either in money or satisfaction.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES.

The last program of the year was given last Friday evening. The following showed that our program work is appreciated by both parents and friends. The debate on "Immigration" was won by the Spartan debaters, Rosalia Lemieux and Phillip Paul. This made the total amount of points given for the Spartan programs 110.7 and for Athenian programs 109.1, giving the Spartans the championship. We think our program work could be better and we hope the next year's work will be better than this year's.

The short course and freshman boys went to the agricultural college at Crookston last Thursday to look over the stock and get a few pointers on different subjects. They returned Saturday to Crookston and then home. They all said they had a good time, even Nick. When Mr. Carpenter mustered his forces at the depot Nick Helm was reported missing. He showed up Monday looking healthy so that his appearance says that he had a good time, too.

The receipts for the night programs will be given to the piano fund. The receipts are Athenian $16.80 and Spartan $12.80, making a total of $29.60. If this note wouldn't stop we would soon substitute a new piano for our old one.

The Senior play, "A College Town," is being devoured by the characters and the practice upon it has begun.

Bellig has changed his seat to the Freshman Isles. The Freshies think he's going to start high school over.

The band boys helped draw a crowd to the program Friday evening with their music. The weather indicates that they helped the spring along.

LAMBERT (OKLEE)

Wendell Brohman from Grand Forks has been visiting old friends and neighbors in Lambert. He was considerably surprised at the changes for the better made here since the last visit here a number years ago.

Quite a number of farms have changed hands here the past month. Among the most noted sales is that of Mrs. Hall's farm of 160 acres, purchased by the Hayes bros. of Illinois, who were here with the sisters and proceed to rent farming. Who's next?

A daughter was born to Mr. and Mrs. Louis Toulouse last Friday, and a happy time for the little one's life were entertained for a couple of days but at last reports both mother and child are doing well.

Mrs. Wm. Hart returned from Bemidji last Thursday night, but was unable to bring her little daughter back home owing to a set-back in her condition.

Chas. McGinty made his first trip on the Last River Monday making for kay and came back more in love than ever with northern Minnesota. Charlie was surprised to see what eastern Red Lake county had to show in farms and fields.

Oklee is to experience a small boom here as Charlie Seeger will build a residence, Fred Bender will also build in the early summer and Thorpe Bros. have purchased the lot north of Ben Bender's and store and will put up a real estate office soon. Mr. F. Thorpe having just arrived from North Dakota.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Bell and Mr. and Mrs. L. Doucet spent Sunday evening at the O'Neill home in Chester.

Mrs. Perrault, nee Toulouse, and a pioneer resident of Lambert, is spending the winter with her sister, Mrs. Perrault, at Rooks, and attended mass at Old Lambert Sunday.

There are some telephone line speculations floating around to the effect that a meeting may be called to consider the building of a five mile line between Lambert and three ness townships to connect at the post office at Oklee thus putting the farmers all along the town line in close touch with the Garden Valley for long distance. This would be a fine thing for all concerned as the river farms are nearly all a mile long and the owners live on the north ends while the Doucet line to Brooks goes through the center of the township, one mile west, it would save many hurried trips and many a young folks contented on the farms, besides it is the proper thing for the best strip of land in northern Minnesota to get in line on.

PLUMMER

Salon Magnan returned from Crookston yesterday and is busy preparing for his dredging operations this spring.

E. B. Lanager was down to Cary the first of the week, having been called there by the serious illness of his aged mother.

Mayor Pettineau is the only adult ted Democrat in town and his friends have intimated to him that "silly" breathes easier, walks lighter and smiles oftener now that he is truly a subject of his own party.

Oscar Johnson of Oconto arrived here the first of the week and brought with him his household goods which he has stored in the Johnson building east of the postoffice, until he expects to move to Canada.—Pioneer.

Settled With Wrestlers.

Promoter Hans Angell has reached a financial settlement with Sailor Jack of Duluth and Lorez Curtis of Hibbing, after which both men left the city on the afternoon trains. Each received $30 as his share of the gate receipts which had been placed temporarily in the sheriff's hands for safe keeping at the close of the match on Tuesday evening previous. A large share of the remaining funds went to pay expenses, and the management reports to have come out about even on the season's series of matches. The excitement over the match has quieted down and the spectators generally agree that they received their money's worth.—Thief River News-Press.

won in an open contest in which all separators were allowed to enter, embracing fifty consecutive runs, lasting over thirty days and covering milk from ten different breeds.

You would not expect to buy the best cow in a herd for the same price as the poorest cow. Neither would you sell your most productive cow at as cheap a price as your least productive cow. So it is with the United States Cream Separator.

The United States Cream Separator won the Grand Prize (highest award) at Seattle, 1909, the Gold Medal at the California State Fair, 1911, the only awards on cream separators at the Utah State Fair, 1912; while the dairy products of the U. S. not only won the Gold Medal at the National Dairy Show, Chicago, October 24-November 2, 1912, but have been awarded other Gold Medals, Silver Cups and First Prizes without number.

The daily work of the United States Cream Separator in the agricultural colleges and on hundreds of thousands of farms backs up its reputation as closest skimming cream separator.

Prof. Haecker, of Minnesota Agricultural College, says:

St. Anthony Park, Jan. 16, 1912.

We have used the United States Cream Separator at the Minnesota Dairy School of Agriculture for more than eleven years, and we have always found them to be standard machines, and only doing high class work, but very durable and rarely requiring repairs

T. L. HAECKER,
Professor of Dairy Husbandry, in charge.

Professor Mortensen, of Iowa State College, says:

Iowa State College, Ames, Iowa, Feb. 12, 1912.

We have operated one of the Interlocking Style and are pleased to inform you that we consider it to be a high class machine. It is operated with ease and is a close skimmer. It has in every respect given good satisfaction.

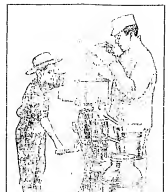
Professor of Dairying.



PRICE $25 AND UPWARD

According to capacity.

Old separators of all makes taken in part payment.

The 1913 model U. S. is Operated with HALF THE POWER of older models

Important improvements have made the 1913 model United States Separator one of the lightest running cream separators made.

The skimming area of the U. S. skimming device has been nearly doubled enabling the latest models to skim practically twice as fast. This double capacity of the bowl has permitted the reduction of the bowl diameter nearly one-half without reducing the capacity. The bowl in the 1913 model United States is one of the smallest as well as easiest running used in separators.

Improved gear construction. The angle of the gear teeth determines the effectiveness of the power applied at the crank. A new slant in the gear teeth enables all the power applied on the crank to be used in turning the bowl. The weight of the handle alone starts the U. S. Separator.

Bear in mind that not only can any child or woman easily do the skimming with the light running United States Separator but that this quality is wholly due to improved construction and in no way to a weakening of its famous wearing qualities.

Ex-President National Dairy Show.

I do not see how one could get a better separator than the "United States" if they all work as this one does. I am satisfied with it in every respect and take pleasure in recommending it to my friends.

COLON C. LILLIE,
Lillie Farmstead, Coopersville.

"Easiest Running Machine There Is."

I purchased a 1911 model United States Cream Separator of Banta Bros. & Company a few months ago, and it is the easiest running machine there is. The new bowl has the best skimming device made. I will further state that the new U. S. Separator can be cleaned in half the time needed to wash any other separator.

MRS. FRANK LOSCHER, Washburn, Ill.

Leading Wisconsin Farmer says:

I am separating the milk from thirty six cows with one of your No. 11 Interlocking Separators and am very well pleased with the work it is doing. One thing that I am especially well pleased with is that it will separate its rated capacity. Its good work and produces a uniform density of cream. It is very simple to operate and one of the easiest separators to wash and keep clean there is on the market. I certainly recommend the Interlocking Separator to any prospective purchaser.

T. E. ANDERSON,
Tomah, Wis.

Make more money You are going to run some separator twice a day. If it does not skim clean you are not making all the money that actually belongs to you. If it is hard to run or difficult to wash you are doing unnecessary work for which you are getting absolutely no return either in money or satisfaction.

Free Offer Before buying any separator why not take up with our FREE offer to give you a practical demonstration of a 1913 model United States Cream Separator right at your home and personally try out our claims.

Remember this demonstration costs you nothing, carries no obligation to buy and is offered to get you acquainted with the big 1913 improvements in the U. S. Simply fill out and mail the coupon. Now is the time.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES.

The last program of the year was given last Friday evening. The full house showed that our program work is appreciated by both parents and friends. The debate on "Immigration" was won by the Spartan debaters, Rosalin Lemieux and Phillip Paul. This made the total amount of points given for the Spartan program 135.7 and for Athenian program 109.1, giving the Spartans the championship. We think our program work could be better and we hope the next years work will be better than this year's.

The excitement over the match has quieted down and the spectators generally agree that they received their money's worth.—Thief River News-Press.

Mrs. Ed. Lanager is moving to Alvarado this week. Mrs. Lanager will be missed in the social circles of Lambert, but we are pleased to welcome the new comers.

Chas. McGinnity made his first trip up the Lost River Monday looking for hay and came back more in love than ever with northern Minnesota. Charlie was surprised to see what eastern Red Lake county had to show to farms and fields.

Oklee is to experience a small boom soon as Charlie Sonner will build a residence, Fred Bender will also build in the early summer and Thorpe Bros. have purchased the lot north of Dan Reiwer's feed store and will put up a real estate office soon. Mr. F. Thorpe having just arrived from North Dakota.

Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Reil and Mr. and Mrs. L. Doucet spent Sunday evening at the O'Neill home in Chester.

Mrs. Perkins and Toulouse, and a pioneer resident of Lambert, is spending the winter with her sister Mrs. Perrault, at Brooks, and attended mass at Old Lambert Sunday.

There are some telephone line speculations floating around in the street but as a matter may be called to consider the building of a five mile line between Lambert and Oklee township to connect at the post office at Oklee thus putting the farmers all along the town line in close touch with the Garden Valley for long distance. This would be a fine thing for all concerned as the river farms are nearly all a mile long and the corners are on the north ends while the Doucet line to Brooks runs through the center of the township, east and west, it would save many hundred miles and keep the young folks interested on the farms besides being the proper thing for the best strip of land in northern Minnesota to get in line on.

PLUMMER

Salem Nagean returned from Crookston yesterday and is busy preparing for his dredging operations this spring.

E. B. Lanager was down to Gary the first of the week, having been called there by the serious illness of his aged mother.

Magnet Bottineau is the only admitted Democrat in town and his friends have intimated to him that "Bill" breathes easier, walks lighter and smiles oftener now that he is truly a subject of his own party.

Oscar Johnson of Oconto arrived here the first of the week and brought with him his household goods which he has moved in the Johnson building east of the postoffice, until he expects to move to Canada.—Pioneer.

SYNOPSIS.

Mrs. Ralph Coffin, supposed widow of a smuggler, is sent from Trimet to Boston, the fellow-town of her master, for whom she had kept house. Ryan Pepper, steward, offers marriage, but is subsequently refused. Capt. Hanson, of the ship Kezia, which brought Mrs. Coffin, heads a place as housekeeper for the next minister, and she decides to remain there. Keziah takes charge of affairs, finds the new minister, Nathaniel Atwood, a widower of the gentle, timid, scholarly sympathy in attending a "come-outer" meeting, and falls in love with him. The Napoleon of American Bandits

The Account of a Forgotten National Conspiracy By G. T. Ferris

(Copyright, by Ridgway Co.)

Organized banditry doesn't flourish under our economic conditions in the United States. Sporadic crimes such as those of the train robber, of the so-called Black Hand, and the lone highwayman are prognost enough to occupy considerable portion of the news-papers, as they are in all civilized communities. But we must look back to a much earlier period to find a chronicle of an attempt to bring together in a widely extended conspiracy under a single head all the forces of evil which festered over 50,000 square miles of sparsely settled territory.

The field of this satanic campaign extended from Cairo, Ill., to the Mississippi delta and out the width of a broad swath through a half score of slave states. Wholesale and retail robbery, counterfeiting, land swindling, negro stealing and selling, blackmailing, and even murder and assassination, all played their part in this vast campaign of crime.

John Murrell, the apostle and leader of this infernal cult, the would-be Napoleon of chaos and crime in the Mississippi valley, the organizer of a desperate clan of some twelve hundred adventurers, taught his followers that it was the safest way in most cases to kill the victim, unless there was some obvious reason to the contrary.

"Make an end of the — fool," he as went to say: "rip out his bowels and heave him into the nearest swamp or bayou; then the body won't raise as testimony."

He himself would boast, in the swaggar of his rage, that he had slaughtered 40 men with his own hand. But most of his crimes were committed through agents.

But the Napoleon was only the fringe of his ambition, appalling as it was. The goal of his hopes was a great negro insurrection throughout the south, which would sweep the slave states like a devasting flame.

With this lust of rapine, giving it a sharper edge, was a venomous jealousy and hatred of the rich which had become like the mania of a rabid dog. The time of the slave uprising he had fixed for Christmas night, 1835.

About 18 months before this expected climax, an interesting encounter occurred in the woods of Madison county, West Tennessee, on what was then known as the Choctaw purchase.

Virgil Stewart, a young Georgian, had come into a small inheritance from his father a year before and had then constituted to invest it in the virgin lands of that newly opened tract. He had made his entry, paid the fee, and started keeping for a time of one Claxton, a probate judge, for a while, had returned to Georgia to complete the purchases and take real estate.

Stewart was out riding one evening in the early dusk when he overtook a striking figure mounted on a fine hunter, which he sat with the ease of a trained horseman. He accosted Stewart with wellbred care and the resonant voice of one accustomed to public speaking:

"Good evening, sir. I hope that you are enjoying your ride in the moonlight gloaming. There is something delightful at this hour in the woods. Nature declares the glory of God"—perhaps shutting his eyes with an air of pensive enthusiasm—"and the sweets of day and dark among the tree-pillars always makes me think of a great church made without hands."

Stewart looked at this exhortation, which he politely returned, and for a moment fancied the stranger an Methodist minister of the better class. But he thought it odd that a gospeler should ride a thoroughbred hunter and carry heavy pistols in his belt and a sawed-off shotgun on his pommel. Yet almost all white men were wont to ride armed then in that country, and there was nothing suspicious in the fact, except the pious twang of the overture.

The stranger caught Stewart's look and said instantly:

"My host, who lives about ten miles from here, is one of the settlers and I thought God would send me a chance for a book. I don't believe in arguing the beasts of the field wantonly, but they were created for the use of man, we are taught in Holy Scripture. Are you reside in this district, sir?"

"Probably I shall," answered Stewart, "as I have recently bought land here, and am on the outlook for some likely slaves. I may have to run down to New Orleans to get them, though it is a country trip, for a good lot of them have disappeared from here of late—run away or stolen. That's a fine horse you're riding."

"Yes," said the other with a sidewise twinkling in his eye which Stewart's keen observation noted, "I'm a good judge of a hoss, or of the sons of Ham whom God made for service. I trust, sir, you will find a rag as good, and all the black boys you need. I shall be horsehours for the next ten-night, and then I shall offer my commeed of God to call sinners to repentance at the campmeetin' over in Shelby county, up Memphis way. Pardon me, sir, but I took an instant likin' for you and I hope ☆ shall get furth er acquainted. I ride in these woods every evenin'. Goodby till we meet again."

He doffed his hat with great punctilio and spurred his horse through a by road in the darkling woods. Neither had mentioned his names to the other.

Stewart pondered over the meeting as he ambled home, conscious of its incongruities. He mentioned the occurrence to his host, Rev. John Hamline, Baptist preacher in the scattered hamlet of Pocahonta and a small planter who worked a dozen negroes.

The domicile rubbed a stubby chin, and wagged his head:

"I wonder if it can be that fellow Murrell, who keeps stealing' negus' for the last six months off and on, down at the Cornews. Ye know two of my boys have disappeared. 'Twas a fortnight since, just before you came back, and I suspected him of slave-stealin', but couldn't get any clue. My wife smelled his name when she heard him lyin' low, but ye see neither of us ever had seen him; he comes and goes like a shadder.

"Then he's got a lot of pals aroun', and some of 'em's mighty peart fellers, all right; hearn him preach the finest sermons in the neighborhood ye ever ye know—and got the spurrit of God in him."

A few days later he again crossed the stranger not far from the scene of the first meeting, and the latter greeted him with an air of unmistakable pleasure:

"I have thought a good deal about you, sir, since I met you the other night. I reckon we're kindred spirits somehow, for I know human nature pretty well and rarely make a mistake," with an air of great complacency. "I thought I'd be here a long, long pow-wow, for I'm a lonely man, though I know many people. I am unexpectedly called away on a mournful evening. Pray, sir, come and spend the night with me at the Cornews. My host of the tavern has fine old 'apple,' and I reckon we can make it for a sling or for—" stopping with a start pursued into an enigmatic smile.

Stewart gladly assented, and they rode together a few miles farther to the Cornews, which consisted of a log tavern, a rambshackle store and a rude blacksmith shop. The ruffianly landlord lowered at Stewart with a glance of suspicion, but quelled at the himself when the latter flashed a handful of gold pieces before his eyes. Stewart gladly accepted the hospitality of the man of mystery began to ingratiate himself.

"This is my friend, Mr —," with a knowing look.

"Oh, my name is Huss, Adam Huss," answered Stewart, wondering with a start whether the landlord could possibly know of him.

After supper under a huge gum tree, and with a tongue well loosened by frequent libations of apple toddy, the man of mystery began to unbosom himself.

"You are a speculator, Huss, and so am I, though not perhaps in the same line. The world has room for you and me and you, too, I reckon, if I read your face right. See the swarms of the rich, whose claws are fastened on all the good things of life, the best to eat, the best of drink, the finest clothes to wear. If ye could only hear my wife's shrieks when I go on one of my things! He's one of the greatest men in the world"—beats Andy Jackson all to death, and I want ye to know him."

And so he went on in a fierce tirade against the whole order of society.

This young man had evidently entered a word, with the same feeling that a hidden spectator would have at watching a cannibals at their ghastly banquet. He had had time enough to make up his mind, and he served him well to see the thing through.

"Sir," he said, extending his hand, "I want to see you are, but put by right there! What you've said has sounded a hidden chord. I feel you're exactly right, sir, and that we ought have later they parted, arranging a rendezvous for two weeks later, as Murrell was compelled to go away on some call of his nefarious work. During that ride and on subsequent occasions this colossal villain told in part the story of a life bristling with crimes of every sort with a smack of infernal pride which Satan himself could not have surpassed.

Murrell's mother, a Tennessee mountain woman, had, in spite of an honest father, trained her young son as a thief from early childhood. While yet a stripling, he began in petal bones, and in disposing of these he fell in with various small predatory gangs, who did not hesitate to murder as well as rob. Young Murrell's superior address and cunning made him an adept in disposing of robber loot, and he gradually became initiated into all the successive grades of crime.

He brought to the business great craft and power of organization and the ability to make use of the villainy of others.

He was arrested for horse-stealing and was sentenced to the penitentiary for three years. He was a model prisoner and gave up his spare time to assiduous reading, more especially to the study of theology, law and the rudiments of the healing art.

Stewart met the bandit chief, and as they rode west Murrell told him that they were on the way to one of the principal headquarters of the clan which was on an island in a bend of the Mississippi, just across the river from Memphis. Here he would meet some of the principal men and be sworn into the band.

Murrell was exhilarated into a fierce hilarity, for the Napoleonic ruffian seems to have been inspired by a genial liking for his chance recruit which banished all his native caution. He had, in his craving for a perfect confidence, begulfed himself into the conviction that in Stewart he had found the very twin of his soul. He now outlined to his companion something of the colossal scheme which was then uprising, over which his diabolical spirit had brooded so long.

"This may seem too bold in you, Virgil, but that's what I glory in," he said. "All the crimes I have ever committed have been of the most darling sort. I've succeeded in all of 'em. I am confident I shall be victorious in this matter. I'll have the pleasure and honor of seeing and knowing that I have accomplished a thing greater on earth with more human blood and destroyed more property than any robber who has ever lived in America that he knows world. I look on the American people as my common enemy. They have disgraced me"—thus he referred to his short term of imprisonment—"and they can do no more. My life is nothin' to me, and it shall be spent in their devoted service. My clan is strong, brave, experienced and nigdily increasing in numbers. I shouldn't be surprised if we number-ed 10,000 at the time of the uprising. And I am strong in the high standing of so many of my chief councilors, whose influence is unbounded and heavy-ive offices. Should anything leak out prematurely, those men would drive away the fears of the people by ridicule, turning it into a cock-and-bull story.

"We have considerable money in the hands of our treasurers to complete our purchases of arms and ammunition, to fit out the companies that are to attack the cities and towns. We will manage to get possession of the different arsenals and supply ourselves from every source that may offer. The impose wouldn't want many acres till they get 'em from the hosmes they devour. me a knife, a stick, a pick or an ax will do to murder families at night, when they are dazed with sleep and terror at the light of their burning homes."

Stewart tells us that he afterward marveled that he refrained from shooting Murrell then and there, for he always kept one hand on a pistol or derringer, a silver-mounted pair of which had been given him the day before by this lucarnate demon.

Perhaps the feeling that the concoft spot in Murrell's nature was the serious infatuation for himself restrained his lifting hand.

They found themselves on the banks of the Mississippi, at that time scarcely lashed, at dusk, but the rowboat on which Murrell relied was gone. He was applied for hospitality at the house of a planter named Champion. He looked askance at Murrell, but the latter requested the loan of a skiff on which to cross. Stewart at once appraised him as an honest man and sent one of the negro secret confederates of the robber gang. Champion felt a note slipped into his hand as the team parted from him, and next morning, read a warning in Stewart's eye, saw a finger motioned to the lips.

The island rendezvous was a six-later-looking place sut in a little river bend that somewhat concealed it.

A dozen white men were arrived at the island. To these "Adam Huss" was introduced as a new and trusted recruit, until about 50 were assembled, all of whom would never have been suspected of other than a reputable life. These were some of the principal members of the band Gordon Murrell and this was the night of the regular quarterly meeting.

The council was held in the evening. Reports were read from local centers as to the progress of the slave uprising conspiracy. Figures were given for the funds gathered and for the various money-making crimes which had been committed in some five states. Plans were discussed for the distribution of the methods of propaganda among the hosts of negroes on the plantations.

The last business done was the formal initiation of "Huss" as a member of the gang and as a Grand Councilor.

The young man was initiated, sernir ty under bloodcurdling penalties, taught all the grips and signals of recognition, and the night was worn out in a mad debauch.

The next day the Grand Council dissolved, its members departed, and Murrell, who stayed in superintend the loading of the black cattle in a flatboat for the slave-market was finally left alone with his lieutenant.

"There's $25,000 in that batch," he excited, "and we will have another cargo next month.

The batch chief in his unbounded confidence then insisted that Stewart should do what he had feared he might not be able accomplish—make a complete list of the Grand Councilors, their occupations, places of residence, and their assignments in a conspiracy of murder, arson, robbery and devastation unparalleled in American history.

It took two days to secure this fatal manuscript from the books, and the scribe was rewarded to find, among the four hundred names on the black schedule, participants scattered over the states south of Virginia, men of unquestioned repute and social place, even professed ministers of the gospel, wolves in sheep's clothing. Judges on the bench, lawyers, practitioners, newspaper editors, merchants and hotelkeepers, some even who were reputed to be wedded to the stability of order and suppression of crime.

When the two parted from the dismal island, reeking with its crimeinfected memory, Stewart, with night overburdened with such a sinister revelation, devised an excuse to stop at Champion's plantation. To him he told sufficient to secure a pledge of cooperation in a movement to arrest, and silence until the time was ripe. It was arranged with Murrell that his new man should meet him at a rendezvous in Memphis, to be formally assigned for active duty.

Stewart narrated his amazing story with such mastery that the news-paper was stricken dumb; suspicious though he had been in a vague way, by such a disclosure.

The first determination that John Murrell should be arrested at the time of joining county and not in the vicinity of Memphis, where he would be met by Claxton, who was justice of the peace as well as judge of probate, and could once discharge him from custody. Champion and some of his friends came at the appointed time to the Hessing, his son, and half a dozen trusty spirits, all armed to the teeth, serving as posse, a warrant was duly sworn out and Murrell taken. When the robber marked one face among his captors he spat on the ground and growled out between his teeth with a sort of frozen rage:

"I'll be well for you that I was such a fool; but mark you, traitor, this business is not over yet, I reckon."

Stewart half confessed that for a moment, demoniac-like villain as he was, there was a touch in the thing of shame that it had fallen to him, and that he was the one who had shown his one human weakness to be the instrument of his betrayal, necessary though it was to the safety of the commonwealth. While awaiting the action of the grand jury, the arch desperado escaped by connivance, but was recaptured and put in the Memphis prison, where he could be more effectively guarded. There he remained for several months in close irons, on an indictment belng for negro-stealing, as the proofs of all the more heinous crimes were, as Stewart had anticipated, difficult to procure. Murrell was convicted and condemned to ten years in the penitentiary for kidnaping and selling other property.

Many attempts were made to get him released during the next few months interim, as well as to assist his escape, but a campaign of abuse and slander of the chief witnesses sent him back at once openly against Stewart, and the partisan journals throughout the south heartily espoused the cause of Murrell as that of an innocent man.

The young Georgian's life, as well as his reputation, hung in evenly balanced scales. Many estimable persons believed in the bandit's innocence, believe in such a prodigy of guilt. He wrote one pamphlet after his trial, an expense a printed pamphlet, with a detailed account of his experiences with Murrell, which was enormously broadcast. One thing he did not do. Stewart did not make open accusation of the names and residences of the members of the Grand Council. He held it in reserve, making it public that the list was in such hands as would bring it forth in the untoward happened to him.

Such has been the result of this. A malefactor superlative in evil and steeped in every conceivable crime, who meditated the overthrow of Christian civilization for whom no long-drawn torture would have been adequate, died in a Tennessee prison after three years of imprisonment, a man universally despised, passing away almost in the odor of sanctity.

Virgil Stewart, who brought him within the meshes of the law and followed him to the end, was assassinated by a large section of the southern public and was defamed by many of the newspapers, who had had unhappily stigmatized Murrell and his associates as heroes in the public imagination.

The latter, however, wrought its compensation. Old members of the Murrell band of outlaws were in time caught and punished from time to time for new offenses, some condemned by Judge Lynch, others by judicial process. Their confessions before execution fully confirmed the narrative given out by Stewart, from ordinary murder and robbery up to the baleful conception to destroy the whole social fabric of blood, rapine, lust and devastation.

Number of Horses Increases.

The output of horseshoes in this country is now 215 million, while their value during that period rose from an average of $42 a head to $95. In 1900 the government reported the whole population to be 2¾ million. In 1910 it had doubled. It is estimated that the number of work horses, not counting those on ranges, increased 465,000 last year.—Our Dumb Animals

PALACE OF ST. JAMES

Meeting Place of Balkan and Turk Peace Delegates.

Historic Building in London Was Made Royal Residence by Henry VIII.—Commissioners Attracted All Attention at Conference.

London.—St. James' palace, on which the attention of the whole civilized world has been fixed on account of the momentous peace conference, is a dark, gray pile, every stone of which unanchins historic memories

For many years the visitor from America and elsewhere has made early morning pilgrimages to the palace, for it is here that the picturesque ceremony of "guard mount" takes place, and it is generally one of the regiments of dashing guards that supplies the officers and men to pursue their old-world task of protecting royalty and the Bank of England. It is also the haunt of the London sursemaid, for here she can combine the morning outing in the park for her aristocratic charges and the glimpse of the wer-shipped guardsman.

During the recent peace meet between the Balkan and Turk delegates the guardsmen and guard mount lost their attractions, and it was a great favorite occupation to stand among an idly curious crowd and watch the prominent statesmen arrives at and depart from the great conference.

There is nothing here to suggest the bloodshed and the carnage that have stained red the page of recent European history. The sequel of the battle of Kirk Kirgy came to an end the mild surroundings of the peace conference, scarcely recalled the roar of the Gatling guns and the shrieks of those who looked upon or guided the course of the struggle. Quiet prevails the park, where the out-of-works sleep during the summer days.

Now and then a le vlein of frosted grass, with a flurry of sea gulls showing regulation drill order, is seen on the branched trees. There is no blut anywhere, the passion below the surface that accompanies the deliberations of frontier lines and the making of a palace.

Although "our Palace of St. James" is no longer used as a royal residence, it still lives its title to the English.

The levees are held in the throna room well known to the late Ambassador Whitelaw Reid and the members of the American embassy, but the ceremony of the presentation of new ambassadors has been presented to the reigning sovereign. It was founded in 1199 and dedicated to St. James the Less. Henry VIII. pulled down the old structure, laid out a park, and in 1532 began the building of a palace.

The Stuarts were particularly fond of St. James' palace. That ill-fated prince, destined to be James II., was born there. Queen Anne lived there, and George II. was the last of the English monarchs to reside at this place. Though he finally quitted it for Buckingham palace, he continued to attend the services at the Chapel Royal. There, according to Mme. de Malzahn, the king stayed so long over his prayers that the cases and family, dropping off one by one, sent to know the king, the queen and his majesty's equery to freeze it out together."

Hitherto the only dispute associated with the James' palace was, when Queen Victoria wished to have her mother there, but was thwarted by the opposition of the duke of Clarence. Every other association has been overshadowed by the Balkan conference, which in times to come will be looked upon as the most important event in its history.

Judge Declares Chicago Is Worst City for Divorce Frauds.

Asserts Decrees Now Granted Would Not Be Asked if Proper Restrictions Were Placed About Marriage and Divorce.

Chicago.—"Chicago is the worst city in the world for fraud and collusion in obtaining divorces. In a single year our lax divorce laws resulted in the wrecking of 3,000 homes and in the orphaning of 4,000 children in Cook county alone. Fifty per cent of the divorces now granted would not even be asked for if proper restrictions were placed about marriage and divorce."

These statements, made by Judge Marcus Kavanagh, speaking from experience gained in personal knowledge of 1,000 divorce cases, made a profound impression upon the other members of the illinois commission on marriage and divorce. The commission was considering three tentative bills, one of which it is proposed to submit out of the legislature for the purpose of ameliorating the evil. Prof. Ernest Freund is also present, as of Chicago urged the commission to adopt a bill on the general lines of the one drawn by the conference on uniform laws.

The discussion was not one-sided. Senator Joel was not sure that there was anything wrong with the present laws.

"No one has pointed out the fault specifically," he said. "I want to know what the real trouble is. Of course, I will support any truly progressive bill. But I do not see how the estate of a bankrupt by making two persons live together because married. He has been a failure. The chancellor, I should think, ought to be able to look into an unhappy marriage relation and say: 'This is hell on earth, and I will never these bonds.'"

The measures proposed by Professor Freund are: Marriages of persons coming into or going out of the state to evade their statutes should be void; affidavits shall give full information regarding the parties, and fifteen days shall elapse between application for a license and its issuance; the state's attorney's office shall be a party to divorce proceedings.

Senator Joel would be compelled to think before rushing into marriage," said Representative Michael L. Igoe. "Chicago is the worst city in the United States for fraud in obtaining divorces."

"It's the worst in the world," corrected Judge Kavanagh.

"I know that is true," interjected Senator John E. Madigan. "My own observation has been that at least 50 per cent of the divorces in this country are fraudulent."

Charles N. Goodnow urged that health certificates should be required.

"Divorce is a symptom, not a remedy," he said.

BELMONT'S BRIDE IS LOST

Former Ethel Lorraine Vanishes After Completing Demand for Heavy Alimony.

New York.—The romance of Ethel Lorraine and Raymond Belmont, who eloped and were married in Jersey City last November, is about to end after various interludes brought on by the bridegroom's angry father, August Belmont.

It was learned that the papers in a separation action brought by Mrs. Belmont against her husband will be filed during the week.

The former actress is suing on the grounds of desertion and non-support. It is her counsel's duty to demand for her large alimony. After their marriage Mrs. Belmont rented a flat in the Gosford apartments for two weeks, and then she suddenly disappeared.

Efforts extending over several days to serve Raymond Belmont with a summons and complaint failed, and it was learned that he was having a vacation in South Carolina. Explanation will be made in the supreme court next week for permission to serve him by publication.

Mrs. Belmont, who continued her residence in the Gosford apartments under the name of Ethel Lorraine, left that address quietly without giving any indication of her new address. Her friends say they are aware of her present address, but decline to give it out at her request.

Albert Lindabury, father of Mrs. Belmont, reiterated his offer to provide a home for the pair in case they should come together.

"I'll not go over to it," he said. "It is only the young man's father who stands between them, and if he finds that his son does not agree to their happiness I would do everything that I could for them. They are quite welcome at any time to take up their abode at my home."

The romance between the two commenced three years ago and resulted in their marriage in Gosford apartments. The young man's father had been steadily opposed to the marriage, and when it was announced it was said that he insisted upon Raymond immediately giving up his wife.

Fact of the Flood

There is no doubt about a great flood early in the history of the human race, somewhere near its place of beginning. The Babylonian tablets tell the story; Chinese literature holds it; Central Asia cherishes the tradition; the North American Indians, who probably came from the same region, bear a legend of similar purport. The late President Harper sets forth the history of the deluge as follows:

"We may regard the deluge as a historical fact preserved in a multitude of forms. We extend and terrible event, which made so powerful an impression upon the imaginations of the first parents of our species that their descendants could never forget it. This calmclysm took place near the cus to the separation of the families from whom the principal races were to descend." The deluge was a fact; it was a part of a great plan; its record is handed down to us in the Hebrew Scriptures in the one clear, distinct account, and when compared with the other accounts bears on its face the indications of its divine origin.

KNEW PROFESSOR OLSON VERY WELL

A. RUBERTUS TALKED WITH UNIVERSITY MAN DAY OF MURDER.

Oscar M. Olson of the faculty of the college of agriculture, who shot and killed a laundry driver named Darling last Wednesday, is a boyhood friend of A. Robertus of this city. They attended school together at Montevideo.

Mr. Robertus says that Olson is a practical, self-controlled man and he cannot account for his having been moved to commit the murder.

Mr. Robertus had a long visit with Prof. Olson last Wednesday and was with him shortly before the murder was committed. Mr. Robertus was returning from Montevideo and Mr. Olson got on the train at Olivia, where he had been to officiate as a judge in a grain sorting contest, and they rode together to Minneapolis. They got off at Shoreham avenue and took the street car to the Union depot arriving there at 7 o'clock. About two hours later Prof. Olson killed the man at his home. Mr. Robertus says that Olson conducted himself quite as usual, giving no indication of any mental excitement.

Prof. Olson visited Red Lake Falls two years ago as one of the lecturers for the summer school.

Paul Carpenter of the Hill-Oehler family knows Prof. Olson very well and speaks of him in high terms.

Mr. Robertus and Mr. Carpenter were greatly surprised to learn of the murder and both have expressed the opinion that it must have been most unusual circumstances that would move Olson to commit such a rash act.

Artistic Badges for State Convention at Thief River.

The local committee on badges for the Minnesota state firemen's association last week ordered the official badge that will be worn by the delegates to the state convention that meets here in June. The emblem is a coat in bronze in the shape of a five pointed star suspended from a bar with a ribbon background. On the face of the badge is a miniature map of the state showing Thief River Falls, the largest city on the Soo line between the Twin Cities and Winnipeg. A sheaf of wheat is also included in the artistic design. Directly above the star on the ribbon background appears a small engraving of the association's president, Dr. C. Richardson. The design chosen by the members of the local department is not only an attractive badge but also an appropriate souvenir of the city and community from which it came.—Thief River News-Press.

Rye Pasture for Pigs.

For full litters there is nothing quite equal to a patch of rye. On rye they and their dams will be more healthy and growthy. In an open winter or where ground is not covered with snow the rye field will furnish almost feed green feed for fall pigs at weaning time. Where green feed is not provided it too often happens that little or no growth is secured on fall pigs. In that case the profit is lacking.

Dr. Spotford will be in Red Lake Falls, March 4. At the Grand View Hotel. —Adv.

John Deere Spreader

The Spreader with the Beater on the Axle

The Simplest Spreader Made

No Clutches No Chains No Adjustments

Easy to Load Roller Bearings Light Draft

Decided Improvement in Spreader Construction

Up to this time every spreader on the market has been constructed along the same general lines.

The beater, being a necessity, however, is different. It is entirely new and there is nothing else like it on the market.

All of the working parts are mounted on the rear axle. There are no gears, chains or clutches to get out of order and therefore no trouble.

The John Deere Spreader is low down, easy to load, very simple, and always ready for business. There are few parts to wear out.

Beater on Axle

All the working parts on the John Deere Spreader are mounted on the rear axle. There are no gears, chains or clutches to get out of order. All strains are borne by the main axle and are not transmitted to the sills of the box or the frame of the spreader.

Beater on Axle

Light Draft—Few Parts

There are at least two reasons why the John Deere Spreader is a light draft spreader made. One is the use of roller bearings, and the other is the fact that the beater does the work of lifting the load. They reduce the draft materially.

Roller Bearing

Another reason is found in the John Deere Spreader beater. It has about 700 less types of castings than the ordinary spreader beaters made. It is also the only spreader beater made of malleable iron, which is reinforced with the shannon steel bands.

Less beaters mean less breakage, less repairs, less expense, and a lighter draft.

Built Like a Steel Bridge

Easy to Load

The first reason for being satisfied with an ordinary spreader are easiest of all. The second and world's first reason is the low down construction of the John Deere. It is only necessary to lift each forkful a few inches to fill each time.

Even if You Don't Need a New Spreader Now, Come in and See It.

SPOONER'S DREAM --BIG STATE CANAL

PROPOSED TO CARRY BARGES AND FURNISH MUCH WATER POWER.

Those who heard the address of L. C. Spooner at Morris delivered in Red Lake Falls last fall when he was a candidate for the republican nomination for governor will remember that the subject about which he was the most enthusiastic was a proposition for the construction of a system of large canals in the state. His plan, he said, provided for the construction of canals that would carry large freight-carrying barges and provide an immense amount of water power.

Mr. Spooner's plan is now being considered by the legislature and it is possible that a fifty thousand dollar appropriation will be made for canals for the purpose of determining if the scheme is a feasible one.

H. J. Hewson, a Chicago engineer of considerable note, who had previously pronounced the scheme a feasible one, has been in St. Paul for a few days to back up Mr. Spooner's claims of the big advantages of the proposed immense undertaking.

Thus in all of head lines may be cause if the canal is constructed Red Lake Falls will be on the canal. In fact this city would have the advantages of two canals, for it is proposed to combine the Red Lake river also.

A map of the proposed system of canals shows that it is proposed to dig the big ditch from Lake of the Woods to Lake Traverse through Roseau, Marshall, Pennington, Red Lake, Polk, Norman, Clay, Wilkin and Traverse counties, Lake Traverse and Big Stone lake to be parts of the system and the canal to follow the Minnesota river to a point about as far down as Montevideo, then the course to be northwesterly across the state to Lake Superior. The canal would cross the Mississippi at St. Cloud and the Mississippi would be canalized to Minneapolis. Thus the big commercial centers would be connected by the big water system. Another canal is proposed for northern Minnesota. This would connect Vermillion lake to St. Louis county with the Red lake and the Red Lake river would be canalized to the Red river. Red Lake Falls would have the advantage of being the point of crossing for the two big canals.

In his address Mr. Spooner explained that if this proposed scheme can be consummated it is believed to lay the foundation of an almost unlimited waterway system connect with the Great Lakes, the New York barge canal and the Lakes-to-Gulf waterway, by the way of Chicago and the Mississippi River, and, in time, to become the greatest system of waterways in the world, far surpassing anything possible in Europe, the use of canals by other country is now so far ahead of our own.

The route proposed was decided upon because of would be possible, because of the "lay of the land," to construct the canal with a much less number of locks than by any other route.

The canal is planned to be twelve feet in depth and at least 100 feet in width at the water line, or ample in size to carry all flood waters to be made use of in a number of proposed power plants.

It is certainly a proposition of great proportions, or dimensions or something like that. Mr. Spooner is known to be a hard-headed business man. Business men are sometimes very accomplished dreamers. If the scheme turns out to be an impractical dream Mr. Spooner will no doubt have earned the reputation of being the champion dreamer of the state. And if the scheme is consummated he will have earned the right to be considered a dreamer of great renown.

TESTING SEED CORN

VALUABLE DIRECTIONS OFFERED BY EXPERTS OF STATE UNIVERSITY FARM.

From fifteen to twenty ears of corn will plant an acre. If one of each of the planted fails to grow about 6 per cent of the stand is lost. If two ears fail to grow 12 per cent is lost. About 15 minutes' time is required to test enough seed for the fertilizing of one acre of land an acre. This method is economical, and enables one to weed out all the poor and weak ears.

The germination method must be used to number the ears. If no heater was provided, lay the ears on a plank with nails driven 2½ inches apart. To keep ears separate write number of plank beneath each ear.

A germination box 24 inches square and three to five inches deep is large enough to test 100 single ears of corn at one time, and leave a margin around the sides of the box. Partly fill the box with sand or sawdust; moisten with warm water; cover with a cloth marked off in two-inch squares and numbered to correspond with the number of the ears. Place six kernels from different parts of ear No. 1 on square No. 1, etc. Reading the list is easier if all kernels are placed germ side up, and tips pointing all the same direction. When all the squares are filled, cover with plain cloth and a little more sand or sawdust or a piece of quilt. Keep moist; leave from five to seven days in a warm room and count. Use seed corn of the highest germinating power that it is possible to get. Count as germinated only such kernels as start strong and show both stem and roots.—The Extension Division, University Farm, St. Paul, Minn.

THE GRAIN PROBE CAUSES EXCITEMENT

PEOPLE WORKED UP OVER INVESTIGATION OF STATE GRAIN INSPECTION.

(Special Correspondence.)

St. Paul, March 17.—That rip-roaring, screaming farce entitled "An investigation of the State Inspection of Grain, or Who Gets the Money" may be withdrawn by its promoters. The introduction of ruderville stunts has spoiled the theme and the legislature is expected to pull the production at any time. To date the show has cost in the neighborhood of $1,000—enough to build a monument of Alexander Hamilton, Minnesota's war governor—and the not results are many folios of testimony, quite a few stripped relations and a clamoring horde of lawyers who want the big show continued for the pure sheer that it brings. Sore in iniquity, and crudled in an atmosphere of bias, spite and animosity, the investigation of grain inspection in the state and its relation to the grain trust markets in the state has reached a point that makes the whole thing an insult to the intelligence of the commonwealth and a practical raid on the state treasury, with a few individuals as beneficiaries. The investigation has degenerated into a fight between trading exchanges, with the machinery of the state being used to point the other the bluebeak. Out of it all the grain grower has got nothing beyond the knowledge that fools and their money are soon parted that the legislature is the biggest sucker of them all.

The grain inspection investigation began with the house, the chief promoter being C. M. Bendixen of Redwood county. James A. Manahan, lately elected conaressman at large, was named as the man to do the probing. Jim started all right, but his temper was uncontrollable and ever since there has been trouble. He simply could not keep his hands off the Minneapolis and Duluth chambers of commerce and any witness having such a connection was grilled to a finish. Then more one claimed to have found that Jim was connected with the Duluth-Superior company of Minneapolis, which in turn had business relations with the Equity Co-Operative exchange in a legal way, and it's try of blue-sky up was an offset to S. S. Works of the senate committee a rival probe, but he fell down in his calculations, as Lieutenant Governor Burnquist failed to name a committee agreeable to Mr. Works. While acting as chairman big ructions have been invariably turned down by the house, and the last committee meeting on Saturday he announced that he was almost ready to quit. As far as the house committee is concerned it is ready to quit, but the senate is handicapped by a lack of funds. Both are still at it, promising that the two legislative bodies will come across with the needed wherewithal, but they will hardly get it. A resolution is now being drafted bringing the whole thing to a close.

"Investigation!" "You're another," "Stop coddling me and we will settle the matter," and "Bottle" were the passwords at a time that characterized the senate hearing of the grain inquiry last week. A crowd came interested in a possible mix between the rival attorney's and witnesses than in finding out what state inspection of grain filled the senate chambers and lobby. Almost anyone whenever one attorney more bold and aggressive than the other buried a crusher at the head of the other. It was a case of the Minneapolis chamber of commerce tries to skin the Equity exchange and vice versa, with the state paying the bill. The Minneapolis chamber had an array of legal talent the best to be obtained, while a few unknowns composed the corps of the Equity. Perhaps it was an unequal division of strength, but it had to be said that what the Minneapolis and Duluth men lacked in numbers the Equity bunch made up in complacks. Notably so far as the Twin City publications are concerned the Minneapolis chamber is getting the best of it, but the Equity bunch is getting from the fact that ever they are tired of the whole thing, and are calling for a halt.

Another probe is now contemplated, that of vice in the state and its relation to the conventions and primary roundings. This investigation was proposed last week by Representative Lommen of Hennepin. One of St. Paul and Plaindler of New Ulm. The chances are that it will not be authorized by both houses. It is to continue for at least two years and a report made in the 1915 legislature. Minnesota is ten sore a state

LOUISVILLE BOYS IN SERIOUS PLIGHT

ARRESTED AT CROOKSTON AND CHARGED WITH BREAKING INTO STORE.

The following from last Thursday's Crookston Times tells of the serious plight of C. and Ed. Provost, two boys of Louisville township:

"Last night shortly before ten o'clock the Guarantee Clothing store was entered and a dozen odd boots and shoes had been apprehended, confessed and the last mentioned arrested. The quick work as Chief Sick and his officers with the co-operation of Sheriff Kelly and Deputy Holt as could be wished.

"Miss Lindblad was looking out of her window on the second floor of the Merchants Bank block last evening when she saw the two men at the side entrance of the Guarantee. She saw them smash the glass, one man entering and the other remaining at the outside as a look-out. She phoned Robert Rosenberg's residence and he phoned Officer Nelson, who made a race for the Guarantee. As he approached, the look-out fled, with Nelson, who had a full load of stolen goods in full pursuit. The thief ran between the freight and passenger depot, down the track past the G. N. Division offices and turned west on Robert street. Some pedestrian was headed for Salmon's addition and Officer Nelson shouted to him to "stop that thief." The pedestrian was not in the street and skillfully tripped the thief. Officer Nelson coming up on the run and nabbing his man.

"His man taken to the station and gave his name as C. Provost, son of a well-known farmer of Louisville township. He told part of the story, but said he did not know where the goods were, which was true. The police went scouting and picked up Ed. Provost a couple of hours later, who said he had the goods and C. Provost. He was allowed to go for the time being.

"Rosenberg and Cohn were then interviewed, and Cohn told of two men coming to the store and picking out a pair of pants, which were laid aside for them to get this morning. Investigation proved these were the pants missing together with some other things. The men talked with C. and Ed. Provost and Rosenberg went to Louisville this morning and brought Ed. Provost in. He told how Chief C. Provost had made a confession, laying all the blame on him. Ed. retaliated by telling the whole story and going to a house on North Main St. and getting the plunder from under the porch.

"The loot found consisted of the two pairs of pants picked out earlier and another pair, a pairs of overalls, 2 neckties and one cap, one other cap being missing.

"Ed. Provost was accompanied from the farm by his father this morning, and at first denied everything. They were going to get C. Provost out of trouble. When the attorney secured sealed the Provost Ed. had confession, he dropped the case.

"The two men were arraigned at 2 p. m., and their hearing set for Saturday morning at 10 o'clock. Bail was fixed at $1,000 each."

The boys were arraigned in municipal court at Crookston this week and bound over to await the action of the grand jury. Each was released on $1500 bond which was furnished. Their cases will come up for trial at the spring term of the Polk county district court.

SPOONER'S DREAM --BIG STATE CANAL

anything possible in Europe, the use of canals in which country is no one far ahead of our own.

The matter proposed was decided upon because it would be possible because of the lay of the land, to construct the canal with a much less number of locks, than in any other route.

The canal is planned to be twelve feet in depth and at least five hundred in width at the water line, or enough in size to carry all those waters to the south now at or a number of proposed power plants.

It is certainly a proposition of such proportions, or dimensions or something like that, Mr. Spooner is known to be a hard-headed business man. Business men are sometimes very much complicated dreamers. If the scheme turns out to be an impractical dream Mr. Spooner will no doubt have earned the reputation of being the greatest plow dreamer of the state. And if the scheme is consummated he will have earned the right to be considered a dreamer of great renown.

TESTING SEED CORN

VALUABLE DIRECTIONS OFFERED BY EXPERTS OF THE UNIVERSITY FARM.

From fifteen to twenty ears of corn will plant an acre. If one of these ears planted fails to grow 85 per cent of the stand is lost. If ears fail to grow 12 per cent is lost. About fifteen minutes of time is required to test each ear by the individual our method in plant an acre. This method is economical and enables one to weed out all the poor and weak ears.

Some convenient method must be used to number the ears. In this way suggests itself, lay the ears on a plank with pins driven 2½ inches apart. To keep ears separate write number of plank beneath each ear.

A germination box 2½ inches square and three to five inches deep is long enough to test 100 ample ears of corn at a time, and leave a little more sand or sawdust on a piece of cardboard. Number ears from five to seven days in a warm room and moist. Take seed from the highest germinating power that it is possible to get. Corn is germinated only such kernels as start strong and show fresh, good roots.—The Extension Division, University Farm, St. Paul, Minn.

THE GRAIN PROBE CAUSES EXCITEMENT

PEOPLE WORKED UP OVER INVESTIGATION OF STATE GRAIN INSPECTION.

(Special Correspondence.)

St. Paul, March 17.—That opposing, conniving force entitled "An investigation of the State Inspection of Grain" or "Who Gets the Money?" may be a reality in its promoters. The horizon-like of vaudeville stunts has appeared in the state legislature and is expected to pull the production at any place. To date the show has cost in the neighborhood of $2,000—enough to build a monument of Alexander Ramsey, whose state government was the one results are many follies of necessity, quite a few strained relations and a clamoring horde of investigators. The big show continued for the last week that it brings. Bon to subpoena, and evidence in an atmosphere of fake, spite and animosity. The investigation of grain inspection by the state and its relation to the terminal operators in the state has developed a point that makes the whole thing look like a big graft, whether it be at the commonwealth and a merciful end to the whole thing, or only a few boosters in the woodwork. The investigation has degenerated into a fight between trading exchanges, with the machinery of the state being used to smash the other fellow. Whether or not all the graft power has got nothing to do with the knowledge that both are born every minute and that the "Gullible" is the biggest species of them all.

The grain inspection investigation began with the house, the chief promoter being C. H. Beaubien of Redwood county. Thomas A. Monahan, lately elected chairmanship of the house, was named to the man to do the probing. But started all right, but his temper was unmentionable and ever since they have been trouble. He simply could not keep his hands off of the people and indicts chambers of commerce and any witness having such a connection was grilled to a finish. Then some one claimed to have found that Jim was connected with the Equity-Buffalo company of Minneapolis, which in turn had business with the Equity Co-Op Export association, in a legal way, and a pot of holes sent up—as an offset to it. Works at the senate conceived a royal row, but he left down in his explanations, as Lieutenant Governor Hammond called to name a committee to investigate Mr. Works. While not the exact number his rulings have practically invariably turned down by the other members of the committee and Saturday he announced that he was pleased ready to quit. As far as the house committee is concerned it is ready to continue, but finds itself hampered by a lack of funds. Both are still at it, presuming that the two legislative bodies will come across with the needed wherewithal, but they will hardly get it. A resolution is now being drafted bringing the whole thing to a head.

"Prevaricator." "You're another." "Step outside and we will settle this matter." and "Rotten" were the passages at arms that characterized the senate hearing of the grain inquiry last week. A crowd more interested in a possible mix between the rival statesmen and witnesses than in finding out about state inspection of grain filled the senate chamber and laughed in unison whenever one attorney more bold and aggressive than the other hurled a crusher at the head of his rival. It was a case of the Minneapolis chamber of commerce trying to smear the Equity exchange and vice versa, with the state paying bill. The senate committee chamber had an array of legal talent the best to be obtained, while a few unknowns opposed the cause of the Equity. People in the big show continued for the performance that it brings. Bon to subpoena, and evidence in an atmosphere of fake, spite and animosity. The investigation of grain inspection by the state and its relation to the terminal operators in the state has developed a point that makes the whole thing look like a big graft, whether it be at the commonwealth and a merciful end to the whole thing, or only a few boosters in the woodwork. The investigation has degenerated into a fight between trading exchanges, with the machinery of the state being used to smash the other fellow. Whether or not all the graft power has got nothing to do with the knowledge that both are born every minute and that the "Gullible" is the biggest species of them all.

LOUISLILLE BOYS IN SERIOUS PLIGHT

ARRESTED AT CROOKSTON AND CHARGED WITH BREAKING INTO STORE.

The following from last Thursday's Crookston Times tells of the serious plight of Carl and Ed. Provost, two boys of Louisville township:

"Last night shortly before ten o'clock Tim Guarantee Clothing store was looted and at noon today both Carl and Ed. Provost, 16 years old confessed, and the loot recovered—about $100 worth of it. The work was done by officers with the co-operation of Sheriff Kelly and Deputy Holt as could be related.

"Miss Lindblad was looking out of her window on the second floor of the Merchants Bank block last evening when she saw the two boys at the side entrance of the Guarantee, saw them smash the glass, one hand entering and the other remaining on the outside as a look-out. She phoned Robert Rosenberg's residence, and his phoned Officer Nelson, who made a race for the Guarantee. As he approached, the look-out fled, with Nelson, who had a full head of steam on in full pursuit. The thief ran between the freight and passenger depot, down the track past the G. N. Division offices and turned west on Robert street. Some pedestrian was headed for Sampson's addition and Nelson shouted to him to "stop the thief." The pedestrian ran out in the street and skillfully tripped the thief. Officer Nelson came up with the run and nabbing his man.

"He was taken to the station and gave his name as C. Provost, son of a well-known farmer of Louisville township. He told part of the story, but said he did not know where the goods were, which was true. The police went scouting and picked up Ed. Provost a cousin of the other man, who said he had not seen Carl. C. Provost. He was allowed to go for the time being.

"Rosenberg and Cohn were then interviewed, and Cohn told of two men coming to the store and picking out a pair of pants, which were laid aside for them to get this morning. Investigation proved these were the pants missing, together with some other things. The men calling with C. and Ed. Provost and Deputy Holt went to Louisville this morning and brought Ed. Provost in. He told him that C. Provost had made a confession, laying it to the blame on Ed. He retaliated by telling the whole story and going to a house on North Main St. and getting the plunder from under the porch.

"The loot found consisted of the two pairs of pants picked out earlier last evening 4 pairs of overalls, 3 neckties and one cap, the other cap being missing.

"Ed. Provost was accompanied from the farm by his father this morning, and at first denied everything. They were going to get C. Provost out of trouble. When the attorney secured faced the returned loot and confession, he dropped the case.

"The two men were arraigned at 2 p. m., and their hearing set for Saturday morning, at 10 o'clock. Bail was fixed at $1,000 each."

The boys were arraigned in municipal court at Crookston this week and bound over to await the action of the grand jury. Each was release on $1500 bond which was furnished. Their case will come up for trial at the spring term of the Polk county district court.

A Worcester hypnotist, defendant in a divorce suit, says that his wife said "look at me," and "sifted" him on the "nut." Trying to knock some sense into him, perhaps.

"What has become of the old fashioned York state cheese as better fate than to cater parasites by the route of death in battle?" asks the Cleveland Leader. Probably he's over here challenging Frank Gotch for $9 per cwt. of the gate receipts.

A New York court has held that calling a person a "scab" is not a breach of the peace. And a few weeks ago another held that terming a citizen an ass was not unlawful. What do these jurists consider really abusive language?

"DRYS" IN THE LEAD

HOLD THEIR OWN IN MANY TOWNS, AND MAKE GAINS IN OTHERS.

SOME RESULTS VERY CLOSE

Excelsior and Robbinsdale in Hennepin County Go Dry After a Very Spirited Campaign.

Minneapolis, March 13.—Town and village elections were held throughout most of the counties of the state. The license question held the center of interest in the majority of localities and if the returns received up to midnight last night are any criterion, the no license forces have made considerable gains in the past year.

The dry element not only held its own in districts which were dry before election, but they were successful upon the territory of the license forces according to early reports, and succeeded in wresting the honors from the "wets" by narrow margins. This advantage may be counter-balanced, however, when fuller returns are received. Only about one-fourth of the counties of the state had sent in reports as to the outcome in the various villages and these reports were very meagre.

Excelsior has gone back to her old love and the two saloons now in operation there will have to make a change or find "other skins" soon for palming, so successful a year ago, was of no avail, and he went down to defeat by a decisive vote. The vote was 89 against 125.

Three saloons were put out of business in Robbinsdale by the narrow margin of 10 votes. It was the first time in years the village has lined up with the dry element.

In some towns the license question was overshadowed by the contest over city offices, and in several instances the fight upon the mayoralty eclipsed all other matters.

Following is a list of towns showing the way they voted on the license question:

New York Man Tells Grand Jury That Woman Was Protected By Ex-Police Officials.

New York, March 12.—The grand jury and District Attorney Whitman spent Tuesday listening to the confessions of the men and women that have been given by policemen in order to immunity from interference while they violated the law.

A further and several women who are also disorderly houses, told how they contributed to the coffers of the "system." Much of their testimony corroborated statements already told involving police officers and politicians. The work will be pushed under emphasis men not hitherto suspected.

One such result of confessions was the demotion of another police inspector, one of a dozen or more high police officials whose witnesses have accused of taking graft.

MEET FOREIGN DIPLOMATS

AMERICANS PRESENTED TO ENVOYS OF CIVILIZED COUNTRIES

President in Brief Address Says He Hopes Amicable Relians Will Continue.

Washington, March 12.—While President Wilson already has dispensed with some of the formalities which hitherto have been observed by occupants of the White House, he demonstrated that he would observe to the letter the international amenities of his office.

Probably the most formal ceremony in which Mr. Wilson has ever participated was the presentation of the diplomatic corps accredited to Washington by the civilized nations of the globe. In a semi-circle of brilliant color, their uniforms glided profusely with the insignia of their rank, 146 foreign representatives stood in impressive silence while the new president of the United States and the secretary of state, William J. Bryan, entered through the big doors of the East room.

The president and Secretary Bryan wore the conventional frock suits of formal occasions in Washington.

Staff Accompanies Wilson.

The president was accompanied by his chief aids, Colonel Spencer Cosby, and his personal aide, Major Thomas L. Rhodes, both of them in full dress uniform of the American army. On each side of the entrance, six White House aides, three to from the army and three from the navy, stood at attention. In groups of six and eight the diplomats and their staffs were arranged. Chandler Hale, third assistant secretary of state, presented the president, first to Ambassador Jusserand of France, dean of the diplomatic corps. Secretary Bryan was presented with similar ceremony.

To each diplomat the president spoke a word of greeting, but the ceremony throughout was quietly formal.

After the president had met individually the circle of diplomats, he addressed them briefly, expressing the hope for the continuance of amicable relations between the nation and their respective countries, and indulging the hope that their service in Washington might be personally enjoyable.

Police then searched Conn's room, in one of the principal downtown hotels, and recovered jewelry and other loot valued at $50,000.

Search for More Loot.

Conn had registered three times lately at this hotel the last time on Jan. 26, when he signed the name of "C. D. Conn, Kansas City." He maintained quarters at other hotels, however, and the police completed a search for more plunder.

According to Conn's confession, he committed three robberies in Pasadena, Cal., between six and 10 in Los Angeles, 50 in San Francisco, four in San Jose, Cal., 15 in Chicago, and from six to 10 in Kansas City, Kansas, the suburban towns across the bay from that city.

FRIEDMANN'S CURE HELPING

DIRECTOR SAYS PAIN AND COUGHING ARE NEARLY STOPPED.

Discoverer of Vaccine Leaves for Canada to Give Demonstration.

New York, March 12.—The first patients treated in America by Dr. Friedmann, who claims to have discovered a cure for tuberculosis, have already improved in health, according to Dr. Max Landsman, managing director of the People's hospital, where the Berlin physician made his first American demonstrations.

Dr. Landsman referred to the treatment as "remarkable." He said the pulses in the patients' chests have been greatly silvered and their coughing is nearly stopped.

Dr. Friedmann left for Canada to give demonstrations of the treatment. He probably will administer it to patients under the auspices of the Royal Edward institute in Montreal. He will attend a tuberculosis convention in Ottawa and will demonstrate his vaccines there. Thursday he will treat 100 sufferers at the King Edward institute in Toronto.

Meanwhile, the government officials who are investigating the treatment say that the physicians permitted to use upon whom they will ask Dr. Friedmann to demonstrate when he returns here Friday.

CLAIM LAW VIOLATION

Rumored Government Will Prosecute Various Railroads.

Chicago, March 12.—Rumors were prevalent that the government plans to institute 15,000 suits against various railroads for alleged violations of the 16-hour law. Gus santaro rallied and will be made the object of 5,000 alleged violations, it was said.

Evidence on the basis of which the government was given by the railroad heads, it is understood, in the course of reporting cases where trains were on duty longer than 16 hours, due to bad roads.

The contention of the government will be that the law has not always been prevented if proper caution had been exercised.

The nine seats gained by the reformers and the two by the progressives are widely distributed and indicate no specially noteworthy change of opinion.

WILL BE NEIGHBORLY

WILSON, IN STATEMENT, SAYS ADMINISTRATION WANTS TO HELP PEOPLE.

WANT TO SEE THEM PEACEFUL

Declares That This Nation Has Nothing to Seek in These Countries—Strict Observance of Law Necessary for Co-operation.

Washington, March 13.—President Wilson issued this formal statement of his policy toward the Central and South American republics:

"In view of questions which are naturally uppermost in the public mind just now, the president issued the following statement:

"One of the chief objects of my administration will be to cultivate the friendship and deserve the confidence of our sister republics of Central and South America, and to promote in every proper and honorable way the interests which are common to the people of the two continents. I earnestly desire the most cordial understanding and co-operation between the peoples and leaders of America, and to speak from it my duty to make this brief statement:

"Co-operation is possible only when supported at every turn by the orderly processes of just government, based upon law, not upon arbitrary or irregular forces.

"We hold, as I am sure all thoughtful leaders of Republican governments everywhere hold, that just government rests always on the consent of the governed, and that there can be no free dom without order based upon law and upon the public conscience and approval.

"We shall look to make these principles the basis of mutual intercourse, respect and helpfulness between our several republics and ourselves.

"We shall lend our influence of every kind to the realization of these principles, in fact and in action, hoping that disorder, personal intrigue and the lawless use of constitutional rights weaken and discredit government and injure none so much as the people who are unfortunate enough to have their common life and common activities so controlled and disturbed.

"We can have no sympathy with those who seek to make the power of government to advance their own personal interests or ambition.

"We are the friends of peace, but we know that there can be no lasting or stable peace in which circumstances of fraud, or force, or illegality are obnoxious to the just rights of any people, whether strong or weak.

"Mexico, therefore, at this time holds and respect the restraints of constitutional procedure. Mutual respect seems to us the indispensable foundation of friendship between states as between individuals.

"The United States has nothing to seek in Central or South America, except the lasting interests of the people of those two continents, the security of governments intended for the people, and for no special group or interests, and the development of personal and trade relationships between the two continents, which shall redound to the profit and advantage of both and interfere with the legitimate interests of neither.

"These principles may be read not so much of the future policy of this government as it is necessary now to interpret it in the spirit of which the principles I say, I hope, be permitted to add that my colleagues are earnestness to extend to the governments of other republics the most intimate and of genuine disinterested friendship and to pledge my own honor and the honor of my colleagues in every matter pertain of peace and amity that a fortunate future may disclose."

The president took the above statement to the senate chamber the next day. His read it to the cabinet, which was in session for two hours, and listened to discussion after he was read.

At the White House it was disclaimed that the statement was aimed at any particular country. It was declared that it should be read to the diplomatic representatives of the United States in all Central and South American countries alike.

While most of the countries in the Western Hemisphere are enjoying domestic as well as international peace, state department officials have declared a close watch on events in Mexico, Guatemala, Nicaragua, Honduras, San Domingo, Costa and San Salvador.

'WHITE SLAVE' PROBE

WISCONSIN, IOWA AND OTHER STATES MAY FOLLOW EXAMPLE OF ILLINOIS.

WANT MERCHANTS TO HELP

Chicago Witnesses Say They Can Pay Women Better Wages—But They See Little Good From It.

Chicago, March 12. — Lieutenant Governor Barrett O'Hara, chairman of the Illinois senate committee investigation of "white slavery," has received communications from the governors of Wisconsin, Iowa, Indiana, Michigan and Ohio, informing him that they will include in their next message to their legislatures a recommendation for the appointment of commissions endowed with the same plenary powers as the Illinois body.

"The movement promises to develop the most important stand against white slavery that ever has been undertaken," said Mr. O'Hara. "Each commission will investigate the conditions in its own state as here is done, but there would be joint sessions and conferences, and the records of each body would be available to all of the others."

Is $12 a Week Too High?

William C. Thorne, vice president of Monotype, Ward and company, a mail order house, told the vice commission that a girl "adrift" can live on $8 a week, thus:

Room rent, $3.50.

Breakfast (coffee and rolls) 40 cents.

Luncheons, 50 cents.

Dinners, $1.40.

Car fare, 60 cents.

Clothing and incidentals, $1.70.

The witness gave the foregoing statement to show that the average girl he said, were the actual expenditures of one of his 1,273 female employes. Another girl employe disbursed her wages as follows: Room and board, $3.50; laundry, 75 cents; lunches, 20 cents; clothing and incidentals, $3.80; savings, $2 cents.

The statement fails to account for a single bath of the week, but this was not explained and Senator Beell remarked that the girl probably spent it privately.

The witnesses, in addition to Thorne, were James Simpson, George Lytton, Joseph Basch, John T. Pirie, H. J. Bahnsen, Henry C. Schwab and Albert Ellinger, all representing department stores employing thousands of girls and women.

There were not witnesses from the underworld.

The commission, which expects to pursue its work for the next few weeks, adjourned till further notice, which probably will be given the latter part of next week.

Senator Juul told Thorne that girl who have to live on $8 a week and get tempted to having "gone wrong" because they could not make a living otherwise.

Want Merchants to Help.

"We want your assistance," he said in and help us stop that sort of thing," said Senator Juul. "I tell you it's an awful situation when a girl can't get a job."

"Oh, yes, but for the most part I don't believe those exist," interrupted the witnesses.

The heroines of Montgomery, Ward and company for the last fiscal year had been $1,000. An act were to the having calculated that the expenditure of $75,000 a year would reina the salaries of the girls at seven dollar girls to $10, asked if witnesses diff ent think the same, and the two well spent in that way.

"Yes," was the reply. "We are already spending that much in benefits, old age pensions, and the like. We think it will be better for our employes very closely, and if this combination can show we are at a fair, we'll remedy the defect. If it can be shown that our girls cannot live decently they shall have it, although I think $8 is a good minimum."

Thorne said that in his opinion a minimum wage scale of $12 a week for women would affect about 5 per centers cent of Illinois, and cost half the women by that much.

"The law would not bother us much but the factories would feel it and we would hire less because of woman if they had to pay $12, because they can get work out of the men, he said.

Must Cover HatPin Points.

Boston, March 12.—Those women who wear hatpins need not cover the points of their hatpins with some plain cork if they wish to protect the public from injury will hereafter be liable to a fine of $10 for each act to this effect was signed by Governor Foss yesterday. The manner in which the law is to be enforced is harmless is left to the discretion of the wearer.

Reforms Embodied in Bills.

New York, March 13.—Four legislative committees on remedial policy legislation has concluded its public hearings and is framing into bills city police conditions. Three topics of importance discussed by the witnesses at the hearings were saxicc, disorderly resorts and gambling as source of police graft. Remedies were also discussed.

Free Sugar Agreed Upon.

Washington, March 10.—A federal income tax, probably of 1 per cent, and a free sugar tariff schedule practically were agreed upon by the Democratic ways and means committee in the sixty-third congress. Tariff revision was taken up where it was dropped at the close of the last session, and the Democrats will must every day from now on to perfect their bill before the extra session begins on April 1.

Airship Startles African Cave Dwellers

DOUTRAT, A VILLAGE OF CLIMBING TROGLODYTES

ALL THAT CAN BE SEEN OF TROGLODYTE VILLAGES OF MATMATA.—

AVIATION has another feat to its credit. Flying high over the deserts of northern Africa, a dirigible balloon, one of the newest of the wonderful inventions of man, has just afforded another ultra-modern contrivance—the camera—its first chance to scan a group of dwellings as old in style as any that man ever built for himself.

It was the Italian dirigible balloon "P 2" that accomplished the feat and gave the Italian invaders of Tripoli additional reason for patting themselves on the back and feeling like the vanguard of progress. While the balloon hovered high over the arid waste that lies back of the Mediterranean coast of northern Africa, the photographer trained his camera on a lot of holes in the desert—apparently burrowed by animals instead of being, that however, they were all that was visible of villages teeming with human beings, of troglodyte villages, whose inhabitants dig deep into the earth to find a home just as their forefathers did thousands of years ago, when the dirigible balloon and the camera and the Italian nation were things undreamed of.

This unique picture of underground dwellings taken from a point far up in the air by the latest European visitor to the cavemen has aroused renewed interest in these African troglodytes, whom only a few travelers have ever beheld.

This most recent visitor sojourned among the cave-dwellers of Matmata, back of the Mediterranean coast of Tunisia, and from these struck still further inland to the places where the "climbing troglodytes" dwell and the nomads of the desert store their grain and other valuables in storehouses which, though built above the ground, are fashioned exactly like the underground homes of their neighbors, thus leading scientists to believe that their ancestors burrowed into the ground.

Curious, indeed, are the tales brought back by this latest adventurer into the land of the troglodytes. When he approached the underground dwellings of Matmata all the women whom he encountered ran away, covering their faces as they went. He was taken into homes deep down in the earth, yet furnished with carpets hanging from the earthen walls, with modern tables and benches.

But those who went before him have given us more minute details as to this extraordinary people. In 1911 an American, pointed out on every side as the first of his race to venture into the Matmata region and the desert spoon bidden behind it, sojourned for some time with the kaid, or chief man, of Matmata, traveled with guides provided by this local potentate far into the hinterland and gathered the materials for a long account of his wanderings, to say nothing of a splendid series of pictures. Previous to this visit the troglodytes had entertained only French archaeologists and still earlier—far back in the nineties, when they were scarcely known at all to the outside world—they opened their curious abodes to Bruno, a Danish explorer, who also lived with the kaid of his day and gave an interesting account of what he saw.

Frank Edward Johnson is the man who can lay claim to being the only American who has lived among the cavemen of northern Africa. While he was in Tripoli some years ago he became quite chummy with the kaid of Matmata, an intelligent native, whom the French masters of the land had appointed to rule over an inland tribe. This native later became head of Matmata and, happening to read in some American magazines an article by Mr. Johnson on troglodytes, he wrote to the author at his home in Norwich, Conn., that he would improve his knowledge of the subject by paying his old friend a visit. "I am a troglodyte myself," the writer of the letter remarked. So Mr. Johnson left his Connecticut home, sailed across the sea to Tunis, transferred to a small coasting steamboat, which landed him at the desert port of Gabes, and after a wearisome journey over the sands, found himself within view of the village of Matmata. Or rather, he didn't find himself within view of it. It was there, but he couldn't see it.

"Imagine arriving at a town of 5,000 inhabitants and not seeing a house—only a picturesque mosque built since the French occupation," he said, in an article which he wrote for the National Geographic Magazine after his return to the United States.

When he finally looked groundward and located the village, he slipped and stumbled down the sides of a huge hole dug in the ground, and found that it was a courtyard of his friend, the kaid, from which other openings led into living rooms and store rooms. Every house is built in just this way—one large hole, left uncovered, for a courtyard, and everything else leading out of it deep into the earth.

The big holes vary in depth and width, averaging about nine yards deep and fifteen yards in diameter, once in the middle of each courtyard is a square masonry trough which pipes rainwater into a large cistern. This is a most important home adjunct, as water is very scarce. Every drop of rain is carefully preserved, especially as only that the unfortunate horses, goats, sheep, and donkeys belonging to the natives are watered only once in twenty-four hours.

The kaid's dwelling is a superior one of the kind. Its entrance was whitewashed and several articles of European furniture dropped about the various holes that serve as rooms. Another high-class dwelling of this underground village is that of Sheik Fordjini, who courteously invited Mr. Johnson to pick his way down the steep walls of the "courtyard" and pay him a visit. He therefore did visit those.

"A young man burned a handful of dried esparto grass, which flamed up brightly and showed us the steps and rooms down the hole. I followed him over a donkey eating its hay. Great eyes glared at me from out of the blackness. On coming into the large round courtyard one soon would think the sheik the father of at least twelve infants, for children from two to ten years old are curiously watching us. They are very fond of bonbons and sugar. Whenever money was given the sheik is divided among the children."

He met the sheik's beautiful little six-year-old daughter, who liked to be photographed with her playmate, little Ayesha, and her little brothers. After gratifying this taste for her a door of palm leaf boards was pushed aside and the American was ushered into the sheik's private room—or rather cave—out one of the cold rock. In it was an old wooden chest, many gunt, and a bedstead hewn out of rock, but provided with comfortable looking mattress mattresses filled with wool and with native blankets. There was also an oil lamp made just like those the Orcels in Italy once used.

The kaid of Matmata was very polite to Mr. Johnson. Moreover, the latter traveled about in the neighborhood to look up other interesting communities he was provided with knives, spoons, forks, and napkins by his hospitable host, who protested against this vehemently, as he was quite willing to "rought it," but the seven-hundred-leg him had received iron-clad instructions and refused to deviate from them the least bit.

Under such auspices the American had ample opportunity to study the customs of the country, and he has much that is interesting to say about them. Of the kaid's village he writes:

"Matmata has its special code of etiquette. Never does one go straight to another man's dwelling to look down into the great circular courtyard and see his women. It is not only bad form, but it is dangerous. Each dwelling has a number of Kabyle dogs that keep a constant watch, and one approaches usually by out at you sod like to tear you into pieces. Never enter a passage way to a dwelling without sending in a boy or girl to announce the woman to know that you are coming in."

From Matmata the American traveled west inland to Medenine, a town of most singular appearance, composed of thousands of "circular" cave-shaped dwellings, built above ground, and piled up on top of each other. The only way to reach the upper ones is by means of projecting stones every month or two, the country of use. The inhabitants leap from one to another in the great circular courtyard and see his women. It is not only bad form, but it is dangerous. Each dwelling has a number of fierce Kabyle dogs that keep a constant watch, and one approaches usually by out at you sod like to tear you into pieces. Never enter a passage way to a dwelling without sending in a boy or girl to announce the woman to know that you are coming in."

Medenine is only partly inhabited. Most of the houses are used for storing grain by the tribesmen of the neighboring desert. It is a silent, melancholy place. His a graveyard out in the desert.

Beyond it are numerous villages peopled by what are known as troglodytes—cave-dwellers who dig into hillsides. They have a partiality for the most inaccessible eminences. "As soon as I saw a particularly steep crag, a veritable engel's nest, I felt sure that it was honey-combed with troglodytes' dwellings," writes one French explorer, "and it usually was." The reason is that the French have not recently been able to introduce order and safeguard life in the sandy stretches where the cavemen live. Before the advent of French rule the district was the scene of constant and sanguinary faction fights between the various tribes, of sudden raids by the nomads of the Sahara, who desolated any village that they caught unprepared, massacred its fighting men and carried the rest away to slavery. Therefore the natives tunneled and scooped out every peak they could find and stationed sentinels on the top most vantage points that the approach of the enemy might be signaled in good season.

One of the most striking of these spries is Doutrat—a beehive mountain perched high over a deep ravine. It consists of countless caves and niches, dug in tiers along the mountainside, and surmounted by a "kasr" or citadel now in ruins. "A huge human anthill," the American traveler calls it.

Among the cave-dwellers of northern Africa is a sprinkling of Jews, who do most of the business in the underground villages. In their hands is an almost complete trade, for, though the cave-men, like other Mohammedans, are supposed not to drink the juice of the grape, they are lax in their observance of this rule laid down by the Prophet.

The people of Matmata and the rest of the troglodyte villages are absolutely poor. This is true to such an extent among some of them that they look forward with joy to a flight of locusts, since by capturing plenty of these pests they can be assured of having something to eat for quite a while.

Strange as it may seem to one of the Western race imbued with certain set ideas about the East, those who have traveled among the troglodytes assert that their women, instead of being oppressed as inferior beings by the men, possess great influence in the community. They do a good deal of the burden-carrying, to be sure, but this is because they pride themselves on their strength and insist on exercising it. Many have fine figures, clean-cut features and beautiful eyes.

GREAT MEN IN COMMON CLAY

ORVILLE WRIGHT.

The critics called him crazy when he said he would dare to take a little fuzz and navigate the air, they laughed when constant mishaps to all his experiments, and chortled when he believed some day he'd be a hero. But all things have a climax, he kept on sawing woodand cutting aerial didoes and finally made good. His fame would not be complete in this decade, no more was heard the horse-laugh, the hoot and mocking jeer. The critics crowded round him and thumped him on the back, each one said he had praised him wise, everything looked black. And now he takes it easy and lets the others fly, he sells to Aviators and then sailing by. The dollars pour in swiftly, he bears an honored name, and thus rests well contented with fortune and with fame. Old Earth now suits him plenty, he scorns the dizzy flight, the here husk looks phony to Mr. Orville Wright.

LIFE GOOD AT AGE OF SIXTY

Common Sense Reply to a Letter Carrier Who Would Like His Pension Earlier.

So much depends on the point of view!

For example, it is proposed to give pensions to the postmen, and the terms on which the policies shall be paid are under discussion. We read in the New York Times that the young clerks favor having them payable on demand after 30 years' service, irrespective of age or disabilities, says Harper's Weekly. Older men say that would result in pensioning off some men while still in their forties, and suggest sixty as a proper age for retirement. To that, with fine scorn, retorts Charles Gardner, a Madison square letter carrier:

"What good is a man's life to himself when he's sixty years old and over? Give us our leisure while we have life enough in us to spend a year or two in peace. Work us until we're worn out and you work us into the shadow of the grave in a few cases, and forget us in the rest of all the other cases. I'd like to get my case in my old age a little earlier if I'm to have a chance at it at all."

Undoubtedly at sixty we are in the shadow of the grave, but so we are at fifty, at forty, at fifteen, at six and at one. All life goes on in that shadow. It may go on at sixty mighty well and vastly to the satisfaction of the subject. Charles should not be discouraged. If he lives wisely, drinks light, keeps his health and manages to secure a little sente, he may find life more profitable at three score than he ever found it yet, and that, whether he gets a pension or not. If he will read "Cicero on Old Age" he will get some good points, though sixty is by no means old age.

But, gracious! how folks are reaching out for pensions!

Charity covers a multitude of sins, but it is generally our charity and other people's sins.

Arrangement of Attractive Easter Table

By Adele Mendel

DAME HOSPITALITY, who is even on the alert for some unique manner in which to decorate a table at Eastertime, will find numerous golden suggestions from which to draw, if she looks to the springtime for inspiration. More and more Eastertime is gradually developing in the joyful recognition of the return of the spring. The singing birds, blossoming flowers and bright, sunny days are always associated with the thought of Easter.

There are many old habits connected with Easter, which have been handed down to us. Eggs have always been identified with the Easter celebration, and formerly were exchanged, containing love sentiments much as we exchange valentines today. Another custom was to-buy colored eggs to the parish priest, who blessed them before they were distributed to the poor people.

Another superstition which probably is connected with the origin of the "Easter hat" is that, to be successful in love affairs, one must wear some article of clothing on Easter day.

The appropriate colors for Easter decorations are white, green, yellow and purple, yellow and white, with accompanying green for floral decorations. Lillies, both calla and Easter, asparia, freesia, violets, or any spring flowers are used effectively.

Fluffy little chickens, colored eggs and rabbits are conventional Easter table or decorations. The discriminating hostess who has an eye both to economy and effect can originate really artistic decorations at home. A good idea is to purchase one or two favors and try to copy them. With a little practice you can make many novel decorations which will help make your entertainment a success.

"Three-fifths of the joy of eating is in the appearance of the dainties of the table."

The table illustrated embodies many novel Easter ideas. The table cloth is of crepe paper, designed with rabbits and green shamrock leaves, with green leaves, in a large bowl, covered with lavender and white crepe paper, which has edges cut to form leaves. At the base is a standing lavender and Maline bow. Four crystal candlesticks, with white crepe paper shades tinted to harmonize, are ornamented with violets, add to the picturesque effect of the table. Fluffy little chickens, which can be purchased for a few cents each, are attached with large ribbon of lavender to paper carts. These wagons hold small candy eggs. The tiny wire baskets are ornamented and violate and served in tall glasses, are attached to lavender and white ribbon, paper and trimmed with long-stemmed violets. The place cards have, in the center, a picture on the corner of the card. At each place is a bouquet of violets, either real or handmade, for a souvenir.

Instead of serving ice cream, an Easter gelatine would be very appropriate, as it is violet-colored. This is made by flavoring gelatine with grape juice, pouring into an egg shell. When the shell is cold and firm, remove the shelle and you will have clear violet eggs. Arrange these around a mold of Bavarian cream.

Yellow and white were the predominating colors used in another table. The centerpieces were of large wicker basket, covered with artificial moss and filled with yellow flowers. At each place the place cards were of blown eggs, gilded, with the name of the guest written in white ink. Tiny nests of yellow spun sugar, containing eggshaped bon-bons. For holding nuts there were little yellow paper baskets made by covering a small, round box with paper, to which is fastened a handle of wire, wound with paper. At the top, tied on with a gold cord, is a bunch of real or artificial flowers.

For this luncheon the chicken salad was served in very small flower pots, with grated yolks and whites of eggs sprinkled on top, and a sprig of parsley apparently growing in the center. The sandwiches were cut egg-shaped. The ice cream was served in a nest of lady fingers. The small cakes were egg-shaped and iced in yellow and white.

It is always wise to provide some entertainment for your guests. When luncheon is over give each guest a string and bid them hunt for the egg at the other end. The strings cross and recross about the furniture, and much merriment results in the hunt. Here and there a nonesense couplet can be tied to the string, to give zest to the search. At the end of each string should be found an Easter souvenir.

The children to some extent have appropriated Easter as their day and much pleasure is derived by giving a children's party the week following Easter Sunday.

A table which certainly will arouse the enthusiasm of juvenile guests has a large basket in the center, covered with twigs and green. From this rises a white rabbit, holding in its front paws an Easter egg. From the basket to each plate are ribbons; at the end of each ribbon is a diminutive rabbit, holding the place card.

The candle shades are decorated with designs of rabbits, cut from decorative paper and appliqued on to the plain shade. For bon-bon boxes have Easter eggs filled with candies, or boxes in the shape of rabbits. Where the ice cream in nests made of strips of candied orange peel forms the entertainment, after the children have left the dining room, award a prize to the one who can draw the most perfect rabbit blindfolded. A game which will provide much merriment is to have candy eggs in various places in the room and announce a prize will be awarded to the one who finds the greatest number.

Another novel idea for a children's table is to make a huge egg of crepe paper on a wire foundation, and also three or four ladders of wire covered with twisted paper. Then set little chickens on the rounds of the ladder as if they were just emerging from the egg and were coming down in a hurry. Other chicks could peep out of the egg. The egg could hold Easter favors, or be distributed before the guests leave the table. At each place have a nest made of paper with a pink chicken or a yellow chicken.

After the luncheon is served, give each child some colored crayons and an easter egg and request that you will award a prize to the one who displays the most originality in decorating the egg.

Song of Easter.

Garlands of peace—
Mountains of thees:
Fortress of lilies—
Rose upon rose.
Wreaths of flowers—
Kingdom of daisies.
Bring forth, all these treasures.
"It is here—Easter Day!"

Deck the Earth in rich colors—
The loveliest all.
On its bed in sweet music.
And jubilant, fall:
As white violet sorrow—
Yet strong in its power.
Let the world's every lit praises.
"It is here—Easter Day!"

Let Death's self be overthrown—
Let the Grave be no more!
A dream gone before;
Let the Night of the ages
Be Faith evermore;
Let the Sun and Sea and Eternal—
Let all things rejoice!
It is here in its glory—
The glad Easter Day!

Each Day a New Life.

Every day is a life, fresh with related power, setting out on its allotted labor and limited path. The morning resembles a whole truth. Its eventide is exhorting into age. We born anew every time the sun rises, and lights up the world to do his part in it.—R. A. Frothingham.

Message That Easter Brings

THE MESSAGE of Easter Day to men is the promise of a new and nobler life.

Men may die out of a meaner self here and now into a nobler self, if so they will.

And this is the pledge that the offer of Christ to humanity shall find just higher fulfillment in still diviner forms of being yet to be.

So Easter runs, proclaiming not so much the descent as the ascent of man, step by step, into the kingdom of the highest and divinest of all.

Nature is life. Anything in it that looks like death is but a token and certificate of life about to commence anew. Every end that closes here gives birth to some form letting go its life and casting away its coarser self, that it may re-appear again in forms more beautiful and pure. The men leaves fall and die, but the soil, it has gone downward into the root life of some rarer plant more lovely than themselves, and when the sun and rain summon them anew some forth in forms more wonderful than those more rare than ever they had known before. The creeping worm dies and its mean body is changed by a miracle which Egyptian art and Christian symbolism have alike borrowed to utter—the new life struggling, in the form of silver incubating faith. And this is at once the lesson and the suggestion of our Easter blossoms. We miss the lesson of yonder flowers if we look upon their forms of mere adornment, or see in them only the hues and fragrance of a fleeting life.

Beautiful as they are like as they will fade and fall. But their special appropriateness lies in this, that in all their life under Heaven, death is the stepping stone to his more fair and rich, the law of which is laid with them in death. The autumn winds strip the plant's branches bare, and wither its blossoms, and to outward semblance quench the life out of it wholly. But when the spring rains come again and the sun's kindlier rays kiss the greenness back again into the shrivel branches, there has been at work all the time an answering law of life within those branches, more powerful than all the influences here-sides. And thus our vernal buds best symbolize our Easter bell. How can our hearts refuse, then, to echo those notes of triumph gladness?—Bishop Henry Potter.

ETERNAL LESSON OF EASTER

Comes as an Answer to the Age-Old Question, "If a Man Die, Shall He Live Again?"

There are those who think of death with a shudder, and of the other world with a shaking knee, because death seems to be a breaking of all the ties which are sacred, and a transference of the soul from a foreign world, writes Charles E. Jefferson, D. D., L. D., pastor of the Broadway Tabernacle, New York City. The world in which we now live is dear to us because we know it so well. It is cozy and warm, and we prefer it to any world of which it is possible for us to think. The heart likes the old. It shrinks from the untried. But the message of Easter is that the other world is our home just as this one is. The universe is a big house containing many rooms, and we pass from one room to another. We home in all its parts has been furnished and is constantly kept in order by the baby does not feel himself a stranger when he comes into our world. Love has prepared the way for him, and love has also prepared the way for us in the world eternal.

We are not going to a foreign land, we are not to live in the midst of strangers, we are not to suffer from homelessness in a world that is cold and unfriendly—we are going home. From the first hour we shall feel at home, and we shall feel in at once with the ways of life there, and shall find ourselves in the presence of friends. It is an old question which has haunted the human mind from the beginning: "If a man die, shall he live again?" Easter says, "Yes!" and declares that in the case of death, a man stands up alive, and complete, and at home.

When Jesus presented himself to his disciples on the first Easter they knew him to be the same kind him to be the same friend which he had always been. His disposition had not changed, nor his attitude to them, nor his purposes for the world. He was the same Jesus. "It doth not yet appear what we shall be," but of one thing we may be certain, we shall be what we shall always be ourselves, that our friends shall be the same friends that the Christ we have known here will be the same Christ forever.

Glad Raiment Appropriate.

In the days of Americans fellow customs more as a matter of mirth than of mystery. Yet the custom fashion is as however worldly, cannot lose entirely its religious significance, for self-respect is the strongest human obligatory article in personal ethics, and to adorn one's self is simply to express self-respect in terms of raiment, and there as be no more obvious manifestation of that virtue.

The trees and the plants don their gayest in spring and why should not man—and woman?

Some people get so tired doing nothing that they have no strength left to do anything else.

Naturally, the office seekers think it is very much in the president's inclination for an open door at the White House.

A census has announced that seventy-nine cities have been conquered. Already, we have long hoped that there would be some other way of getting rid of it.

The architects of the Mexican revolution are to be congratulated, from which the only just the opinion that they really consider the last shooting scrap ancient history.

With the open door at the White House, one may walk right in, and, according to the president's statement of April 4, will not be interfered by officeseekers; he may walk right out again.

The White has just passed by congress, which, the shipping at Superior and not by the states, but that will not prevent one from carrying a shipment from the East Grand Forks of goods, as does not pay the freight, or the carriage.

There is an interesting fact, to the Bolshevists and the Soviet government, that the people's republic of Russia is not the most important of all.

A public official should be judged by as much by what he promises to do as what he has done," says the Bemidji Valley Tribune, and that is true, but the old method of judging a man's qualifications by the number of public offices he has held is open to criticism.

It is by no means certain that the Federation tuberculosis cure cures. It has not yet been tried the test that is to determine its value, in spite of the sensational newspaper reports of the labor or the discovery. In the meantime breathe fresh air. Keep the windows of the sleeping room open.

There is always a temptation to take a chance that the grain will get about without formaldehyde, that the pool will not need another set of stones, that the fence will do without stretching the wires. Then the rains pour, the pool breaks, and a hard-haul, the cattle break into the corn—and we wonder why we have such shrivel-hard luck.—Farm Stock and Home.

The wisdom of the action of the stockholders of the Red Lake County Agricultural society in securing title to permanent county fair grounds at the outset of activities of the society has again been demonstrated by the experiences of various other counties. The Crookston fair association has experienced much difficulty in getting suitable grounds and the efforts of the Pennington county society has always been confined that the board fair grounds must be vacated of this spring. These grounds have been used for many years, and much money has been expended for improving suitable grounds and the offer of the owner of the land to sell to the Red Lake county society has, by the purchase of land at the outset, secured title to a site close-in which with all improvements and excellent track and boat than would the have cost at some future date. In addition there is the added advantage, the value of which cannot be computed, of having as a permanent location for the annual county fair grounds so conveniently located.

Washington tradesmen and refreshment dispensers no doubt favor short-er terms and more inaugurations.

SPLIT-LOG DRAG.

Very Effective Road Machine at a Low Cost.

The split log road will doubtless be commonly used in rural communities for many years because of its low first cost. The ever recurring problem of repairs on such a road can be solved very largely by the use of the so-called split-log drag.

Anyone who can use tools reasonably well can build one of these drags at a cost of four or five dollars for labor and material. Very few tools are required in making the drag and its use is as simple and cheap as its construction. If desired, metal drags can be purchased at a somewhat greater cost from manufacturers of road machinery.

Careful use of the drag on a road that is already in reasonably good condition will almost entirely prevent trouble from ruts, mud holes, dust, and give good service at a low cost.—R. Pilat, University Farm, St. Paul.

Singers at Thief River.

The Sunstedal Society of the northwest has decided to hold its annual meeting in this city June 18 and 19. This will be the second time for this large society of Norwegians to meet in annual convention in Thief River Falls, which is a distinctive honor and compliment to our city. About 1,000 people are expected, among whom will be a number of noted personages. Secretary of State of Norway, Mr. Lovelgind, will be here and take part in the meeting.—The River Times.

THE BREEDING OF DAIRY COWS

PROF. HAECKEN'S NEW BULLETIN ISSUED FROM UNIVERSITY.

"While Minnesota has made remarkable progress in improving the quality of her dairy products, the advancement in milk production has not been so great. The average cow in this state produces about 175 pounds of butter a year. Common cows at the University Farm have produced, on an average, 222 pounds of butter. This increase has been brought about through proper attention to feed and care. Progress on a rule, give too little time to the study of feeding. In order to aid them in this study, Professor T. L. Haecker, chief of the division of dairy and animal husbandry of the agricultural college, has prepared a bulletin in which he simplifies the study and arranged the tables that any farmer may easily learn to calculate rations for the cows in his herd.

The author was among earliest workers on the problem of feed requirements for milk production, and as a result of his scientific investigations carried out the Haecker feeding standard, a standard which is now accepted by investigators and teachers as the most accurate means of determining the needs of the cow. This standard is based not on the amount of feed that the requirements of any cow, the quality and richness of whose milk yield is known, may be determined by referring to the tables. The computation of all our common feed stuffs is given in amounts from one to ten pounds. Following these tables is a simple explanation of the method to follow in calculating rations. Examples are given of rations suited to cows giving varying quantities of milk of varying richness. A chapter is devoted to the care of the dairy herd. Information on costs a given concerning the cost of keeping cows. Similar tables are provided which enable the farmer to determine the cost of a pound of butter fat under his conditions. This bulletin is one of the regular Experiment Station series, at the same time the matter has been printed in a smaller form of convenient size to slip in the packet and provided with a stout cover. This publication should be in the hands of every milk producer in the state. Copies may be secured by addressing Dairy and Animal Husbandry Division, University Farm, St. Paul.

Cities of the fourth class now have the right of local option. The Governor Clague bill extending it to them was passed by the house last week and was duly signed by Governor Burnquist. The session of the legislature has not been overstrain in the above entitled action, which com-

Representative Campbell, known as the Minneapolis "fire eater," has brought to light a new form of brilliancy. He was approached with $500 worth of oilfields in a leading Twin City paper if he would draw a certain bill, and he indignantly refused. This is what he told the house last week in a confession before that body. This confession he later embodied in a sworn affidavit, which he filed with the house. Later he modified his statement to the effect that the value of the oilfields he was offered, as stated, but that he figured they were worth $500.

The mothers' pension bill, which Mr. Campbell fathered and which has been signed by Governor Burnquist, which Mr. Campbell was asked to give the initiative, has been revised of the oilfields came from a man connected with a Minneapolis paper and the reason of his interference. Mr. Campbell claimed, was because organized effort was made to handle the pension funds and distribute them under its direction. The Campbell's man's estimate of the value of the oilfields perhaps was rather far fetched, but that he figured they were worth $500.

The mothers' pension bill, which Mr. Campbell fathered and which has been signed by Governor Burnquist, which Mr. Campbell was asked to give the initiative, has been revised by the bill and this even extends to a prohibition on the use of ingredients that would go toward making the substitutes so much cheaper.

When the house took a vote on tonnage tax a week ago and sent it to the senate it was thought that legislation along this line had been effectively suspended for the present at least. It seems not, however. Representatives Praakson, Bjorge, Dunn and others who backed the bill for this session may be depended upon to put a new scheme, which is the same in principle as that which was defeated at the last session, through the house. Representatives Praakson, Bjorge, Dunn and others who backed the bill for this session may be depended upon to put a new scheme, which is the same in principle as that which was defeated at the last session, through the house. For every tan of iron ore mined, bought or sold in the state, there is a tax of 1 cent a ton, which would stand as a lien against the company's properties. That the proposition will ever prevail is doubted.

There are more ways than one of whipping the "old fellow" around the stump and the legislature has members here have found the latest method in the new session of the legislature and a number of judges of the supreme court to favor. The bill has been signed by the governor and has the support of Duluth and Taylor of St. Cloud have been named by the governor. As increase in the size of the court is impossible under the constitution and this the new legislative bodies got around by creating two offices to be known as supreme court commissioners. They are to have the same powers and duties as the constitutional members and receive the same salary, $7,500 a year.

R. C. Dunn's county assessor bill, which passed the house early in the session, went by the boards yesterday when the senate gave it a decided setback. Many amendments were attempted and finally the opposition gave it the blow that put it out of business. Another Dunn bill suffered a reverse was H. H. Dunn of Albert Lea, whose bill amending the present antitrust act was defeated. The farmer members got it into their heads that the bill hit the cooperative, and that settled it.

Minnesota is to have a sixth state normal school. The house has agreed to its establishment and the senate, it is said, will concur. The new school is to be located in one of the upstate counties.

The latest thing proposed in automobile legislation is a chauffeurs' examining board to be composed of one man from each legislative district. A per diem of $6 a day is provided, with an $1,800 salary for the secretary. Kerry Conley of Rochester is backing the proposition.

The present hospital for inebriates at Willmar is maintained through a 2 per cent tax levied against all liquor license money. The house and senate is considering a proposition to increase the tax to 4 per cent. Some want the hospital turned into an insane asylum.

The BANK of PERSONAL SERVICE

WHY LOANS MUST BE SECURED

Since the money we loan is largely the property of those who entrusted it to our care, security on loans is required by the way of endorsement by other responsible persons, or bonds, stocks, collateral notes or similar securities, readily convertible into money.

Loans to customers are gladly made upon a basis of their own personal statement of responsibility and their balance kept with the bank.

Borrowers, giving statement of their business and showing sound financial conditions are often given reasonable credit without other security or endorsement.

We also negotiate upon real estate security, taking first mortgages only upon improved farm lands and desirable city property.

MUST BUY NEW GROUND.

Serious Problem Confronts Pennington Fair Association.

The Pennington County Fair association met last Saturday evening at the auditorium for the purpose of considering the purchase of a permanent fair ground site. It was at first thought the present grounds on Main avenue, owned by Dr. Eshelby, would be available for the 1913 exhibit. The owner, however, has recently decided to plat the property into city blocks during the coming summer. This makes the securing of new ground imperative and a number of the association stockholders favor the purchase of a permanent site.

At last Saturday evening's meeting the twenty acre tract at the end of Fourth street now owned by Hanson and Berzen was favorably considered but definite action was postponed until next Saturday evening when a public meeting will be held in the commercial club rooms at the auditorium. The proposed tract is within easy walking distance of the center of the city and is otherwise splendidly adopted for fair purposes. The land is almost perfectly flat and has a spur track running into it from the Great Northern railway company's right of way. The price of the 20 acre tract is $4,200. The owners agree to take $500 down and promissory notes bearing 6 per cent interest for the balance.—Thief River News-Press.

At a meeting held Saturday night the Pennington fair stockholders made arrangements for the purchase of the twenty-acre tract referred to above. The old buildings will be moved to the new grounds. August 5, 6, 7 and 8 are the dates decided upon for the 1913 fair.

DEATH OF PIONEER.

P. O. Haggland of St. Hilaire Passed Away Last Week.

P. O. Haggland, 63 years of age, for 31 years a resident of St. Hilaire, died at 3:15 p. m. last Thursday at his home here, after an illness of four days, of paralysis, having previously had slight attacks. Despite his failing health for the last year Mr. Haggland has given personal attention to his business affairs.

P. O. Haggland was born in Lecksoe, Westerbotten, Sweden, October, 6, 1849. In 1870 he married Eva Caroline Samuelson, with whom he had ten children, six sons and four daughters. He and his family emigrated from Sweden in 1881 and settled on a homestead in Black River township. He has been engaged in farming up to the last year, when he sold his farm, located in Rockefeller, for the last few years he has been engaged in mercantile business here.

Mr. Haggland was the first county surveyor in Red Lake county, which position he held for a number of years and he held a number of other public offices. He helped to organize the Swedish Lutheran congregation of St. Hilaire and Black River. He was a strong supporter of co-operation among farmers and prohibition measures.

The deceased is survived by his wife and seven children, who are: Carl J. Haggland of Alaska, Mrs. William Bedoon of Idaho, Peter A. Haggland of Gilbert, Minn., Mrs. Fred of Faith, C. G. Johnson of Duluth, E. A. Haggland of St. Hilaire, and John O. Haggland. All except John and Mrs. Bedoon were present when he decided when he did.

The funeral services will be conducted by James Moody of Fergus Falls in the Swedish Lutheran church at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon.—St. Hilaire Spectator.

Walking Around World.

Norman Grantham, a young man from Calgary, Alberta, Canada, who is walking around the world on a wager that involves over $100,000, arrived in Thief River Falls late in the evening train of the Soo line.

Mr. Grantham is a young man of 24 years of age and a man of somewhat pleasing personality being complimentary gifted in conversation. He and his wife spent the Brunswick hotel last night just in time to be royally entertained at the commercial club banquet that was held there last night.—Thief River Times.

PLUMBING

Charley Schouver, of Thief River Falls, was here Monday, being guests home from Odebo, to which place he had "toted" a dredge from the Highwing district.

Among the new arrivals to make their home in this vicinity is George Grant, who arrived here last week from Clarion, Ill., and has moved on to his farm 6½ miles north of Plummer,which he purchased a short time ago. Mr. Grant was accompanied by George Innis, also of Clarion, who will spend a short time here looking over the country.—Pioneer.

Farm Water Heating System.

By JUNIATA L. SHEPPERD, Domestic Science, University of Minn. St. Paul.

A waterback or front in the stove or range is the usual means of heating the water in a farmhouse system, or a water coil can be substituted and when properly installed will do good work. The waterback is preferred in a cook stove because there it does not affect the oven. A heater, however, shows no signs of injury after such installment, provided the coil is placed at the end of the casting not broken in drilling holes unecessarily made for the pipes which must be connected with the range boiler. A range boiler is a necessary part of such an apparatus, and the ends of the water coils in the stove must protrude so that they can be connected with the range boiler, as no other storage tank is called. Range boilers are made of steel, with galvanized inside and out to prevent rust, and vary in size from twenty gallons in capacity to 200 gallons. The size most commonly installed is about thirty gallons, when intended for family use. The pipe which conveys water from the attic tank to the range boiler, if of iron, should be galvanized in the same manner as the tank, and for the same reasons. The use of installation is such as that need be considered in case soft water is used, because when properly cared for such a system deteriorates very slowly. When hard water is used, plumbers' bills are usually frequent, because hard water always forms incrustations or scales, or both, and these must be removed to secure good service and prevent accidents, for the pipes become filled and the waterback or coil is liable to burst if cleaning is delayed too long. Soft water gives no such trouble, and no one need fear to install a system of this kind, because of stories he has heard regarding disasters. The city waterworks carries greater responsibility, because the supply comes from the city main and the safety devices are different and more liable to need attention than with an attic tank. When an attic tank system is properly installed there is practically no danger except from carelessness and freezing, and the use of soft water reduces it to one—freezing. When pipes are frozen, a fire should never be made before thawing them, whether they be the ones leading into the stove or the tank. There is no room for details, but the waterback and tank if the best is applied when pipes are stopped; hence, thaw before building a fire.

Precautions necessary are to have pipes well covered with insulating material, and avoid having the fire go out in cold weather. In case the house is left for a few days in winter the water should be shut off from the attic tank to the range boiler, and the boiler and waterback or coil drained. The water must never be shut off from the boiler when the fire is burning and there is water in the heating coil or waterback, but water must always be connected from the waterback or coil to the attic tank.

For full information on installation and care of water heating apparatus, see "Hot Water for Domestic Uses," by John E. Allen; and "Household Mechanics," by E. S. Keene. Both should be in all libraries accessible to farmers.

PRIVATE EXPERIMENT FARMS

Demonstration Work Must Be Brought Closer to the Farmer.

Farms that are owned and managed by the state or by any other similar organization have this difficulty to contend with, viz., that the average farmer, that is, the men we are trying to reach, will cease and look at it and admire what has been accomplished, but will feel in his heart and say to his neighbor: "They couldn't do it on my farm. My conditions are different. If they tried it there, it wouldn't succeed. Furthermore, of course, those fellows have a state appropriation and a state expert and of course they can do it, but we can't get those men than with an extra team. They can do it." I have heard that time and again, and the government expended great sums for the extension work before the fact was discovered that a government experiment farm demonstrated only what the government could do, not what the farmer could do. So a new method had to be adopted, which is well exemplified by the farmers' co-operative demonstration work of the South. It is one of the most magnificent pieces of agricultural work ever undertaken, anywhere and one which has been very successful, because it recognizes the principle that the demonstration must be conducted on the farmer's own farm by the farmer himself under the direction of an expert. Our experience is that not only the man himself, but his neighbors learn rapidly from demonstrations carried out in this way.

That is what we are trying to do in Minnesota. The State Federation of Commercial Clubs has co-operated with us in finding typical farms of every class that need reorganizing. The farmer selected agrees to follow our directions and we agree to give him plans and advice free. The soil expert examines his soil, the drainage expert makes drainage plans if needed. The crop expert lays out the fields and recommends the cropping system adapted to his conditions and type of farming and similar help is given regarding the selection of stock, selection and testing of seed, etc. The demonstration expert visits him once or twice a month, to see that everything is proceeding according to the plan agreed upon. The plan is to keep in close touch with each co-operator until he fully grasps the new plan.—Dean A. F. Woods, University Farm, St. Paul.

Breeding stock should be carefully selected by the poultryman and then given the best of care, plenty of fresh air, sunshine, and exercise.

CHAPTER I.

The Bonanza King.

The cold of foothill California in the month of January held the night. The occupants of the surrey were numbed and stiffened by it, and too uncomfortably cramped against each other to speak. Silence as complete as that which lay like a spell on the landscape brooded over them. As the last sleeping place, Chinese Gulch, a scattering of houses six miles behind them on the mountain road, they had asked at the main saloon, and where feed and water had been granted to the driver and to the hustler figure on the back seat. The watchers had listened to the saloon door had eyed the third occupant of the carriage with the latent, sleepless curiosity of the isolated man in presence of the strange. Afterward, each one was voluble in his impressions of her face, hide in the smoky lamplight, and the hand that slid, small and white, out of its loose sleeve when the warming cup was offered her.

Since then both she and her companion had turned back to their several corners and preserved an unbroken silence.

The latter eyed wistfully along the road which wound in spectral paths over the shoulder of the foothill, now dipping into the blackness of a ravine, now creeping up a bare shelf, where the horse's hoofs dug in laboriously amid loosened stones. The solemn grandeur of the landscape, faintly touched by the light of large, clear stars, seemed to find appropriate expression in their frosty, smoke-breathing exhalations.

The larger figure on the back seat moved and turned a face, all of which was hidden save the eyes, toward its companion.

"Sharpe?" queried a deep bass voice, the inquiring polysyllable that sat queerly over so squalid a setting worth of collars.

"By golly," came the answer in a muffled feminine treble, that suited the more distinctive bulk.

"Get a move on, Jake," to the driver. "Think girl's most famished."

"Hold your horses," growled the other man; "we're just about there."

At these words the woman pushed up her veil, and, leaning forward, peered ahead. As they rounded a projecting angle of the hill, a huddle of roofs and walls spotted with lights came into view, and the girl drew back her hand forward with an eagerly pointing finger.

"Is that's Rocky Bar?" she cried. "Have we really got there at last?"

The driver chuckled.

"That's Rocky Bar all right. Now you'll get your appetite good and keen."

"No need," she responded gaily; "it's been ready and waiting for hours. I was beginning to think that you'd lost your way."

"Me?" with an accent of incredulous scorn. "Ah, get out! How does it go, Governor, that Bill Cannon girl don't know no more about these parts than a young lady from New York?"

"She's never been up here before," said the man on the back seat, begin to untangle himself from his enfolding rugs. "I've brought her up this one time to show her some of the places where her pa used to work round with the boys, long before she was ever thought of."

A loud barking of dogs broke out as they approached the first detached houses of the settlement. Shapes appeared at the lighted doorways, and as the surrey drew up at the hotel balcony a crowding of heads was seen in the windows. The entire population of Rocky Bar spent its evenings at this hospitable resort, in summer on the balcony under the shade of the locust trees, in winter round the office stove, spitting and smoking in cheery sociability. But at this hour the great event of Rocky Bar's day was over. The stage, the passengers for which dined at the hotel, had long since passed onward on their various routes up and down the "mother lode" and the sleepy quiet of Sierra Thursday night settled on the landscape, faintly broken by the sound of some belated reveler, lurching homeward from the saloon door had eyed the third occupant of the carriage with the latent, sleepless curiosity of the isolated man in presence of the strange. The stage, the passengers for which dined at the hotel, had long since passed onward on their various routes up and down the "mother lode" and the sleepy quiet of Sierra Thursday night settled on the landscape, faintly broken by the sound of some belated reveler, lurching homeward from the saloon [illegible] was about to be supplemented by a late arrival in a surrey, driven by Jake McVeigh, the proprietor of the San Andreo stables, and accompanied by a woman, was a sensational event not often associated in Rocky Bar, even in the heyday of summer-time.

The occupants of the office crowded into the doorway and pressed themselves against the windows.

The hotel proprietor, an ancient man with a loosened vest, and trousers turned into long boots, stepped them as he ushered the strangers into the office. That they were travelers of distinction was obvious, as much from their own appearance as from the fact that Jake McVeigh was driving them himself, in his best surrey and with his finest team. But just how important they were no one guessed till McVeigh followed them in, and into view stretched for the information dropped the sentence, hollowed, like a stage aside:

"It's Bill Cannon and his daughter Rose."

Upon the proprietor it had an electric effect. He eyed from the room with the alertness of youth, promising "a cold lunch" in a minute. To the others it came as a piece of intelligence that added awe to the livelier emotions of the occasion. By common consent their eyes focused on the great man who stood warming his hands at the stove. Even the rare, unusual woman, revealed now as sufficiently pretty to be an object of future dreams, was interesting only to the younger and more impressionable members of the throng. All but those gazed shocked, unblinking, at Bill Cannon, the Bonanza King.

He was used to it. It had been a part of his life for years. Erring his admirers with a gesture, he entered into conversation with them, his manner marked by an easy familiarity, which swept away all shades of embarrassment, and drew the men around the stove, eager to respond to his questions as to the condition and prospects of the locality. The talk was becoming general and animated, when the ancient man returned and announced that the "cold lunch" was ready and to please "step after him into the dining-room."

This guest apartment, grimly unadorned and faintly illuminated, as ordered, at intervals, backed by a thin reflector projecting a feeble light into its echoing emptiness, was swept of all intruders, and showed a bare-like barroom of red and infirmed aspect. Slices of tables, uncovered between flocking wooden benches, were arranged down the length. Across the end of one of these a white cloth was spread and three places set. Jake McVeigh, less innocently democratic than the hotel proprietor, was about to follow the ancient of his distinguished patron and rest himself in seemly fashion at an adjacent table, when Bill Cannon's voice arrested him.

"What are you going off there for, sonny, as if you were a leper? Come over here and sit out of us."

Cancoo, his overcoat removed, was seen to be a powerful, thick-set man, with a baldness that was more a matter of broad build and massive development than fat. His coat sat ill upon him and strained at the buttons. It had the effect of having worked up toward the shoulders, noticeable in the clothes of men who are deep chested and sit bunchily. He had a short neck which he accommodated with a turning of his collar, a gray beard, clipped close to his cheeks and square on the chin, and gray hair, worn rather long and combed sleekly and without parting back from the forehead. In age he was close to seventy, but the alertness and intelligence of a consuming energy and vitality were to his glance, and showed in his movements. Selfhood, self sure and full of precision. He spoke little as he ate with a hearty, healthy appetite, and responding to the remarks of his daughter with an occasional monosyllable that might have sounded curt, had it not been accompanied with a large cast of the eyes her way and was as full of affection as a caress.

The younger lady was had also put off her outer wraps, still wore her hat, which was wide-brimmed and set at a slender angle on the upper part of her face. Below it her hair showed a fine, bright brown, with a silky sheen that gleams to the lamplight. To the people in the doorway she seemed such a creature footlinct with romantic charm, which was expressed in such delicacies of appearance as a pearl-white throat, a rounded chin, and lips that smiled readily. These crowned with a coloring of [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] and

"UNWRITTEN LAW"

PLEA MADE BY PROF. OLSON OF SCHOOL OF AGRICULTURE, WHO SHOOTS LAUNDRY DRIVER.

CONFESSION IS MADE CALMLY

He Had Been Waiting for the Opportunity to Slay Clyde N. Darling—Asked that Police and His Wife Be Notified.

St. Paul.—Prof. Oscar M. Olson, a demonstrator of the University School of Agriculture, shot to death Clyde N. Darling, a driver for the Capitol Steam laundry at the rear door of his home at 51 Nouree street, After giving himself up, Olson, the police say, stolidly confessed that he waited for his chance and deliberately shot the man. Both men are married.

Suspected Relations with Wife.

In the presence of County Attorney O'Brien, Coroner D. C. Jones and Captain Gephardt, Mr. Olson is said to have stated that he suspected Darling of being too friendly with Mrs. Olson.

He took the matter calmly. An hour and a half after the shooting, when the police officials went to the Prior avenue station house to get whatever statement he cared to make, Mr. Olson had to be awakened from a sound sleep.

Clyde N. Darling checked in his day's collections early at the Capitol Steam laundry at 763 Wabasha street and departed. Shortly after 9 o'clock he passed the window of the Olson residence on Nouree street. Mr. Olson saw him. His chance had come. Mrs. Olson was away with her 4-year-old girl visiting Mr. Olson's brother at Montevideo, Minn.

Goes to Meet Victim.

Darling entered the rear door which leads into a small summer kitchen. From the position in which the body was found the tragedy occured at the opening of the door. Darling apparently had revolver against the man's breast and fired, immediately before a second bullet, which entered in two inches of the first. Both pierced the breast and probably one entered the heart, though a close examination of the body has not been made.

A few moments later Mr. Olson presented himself at the home of A. L. Anderson, an employe of the Capitol fice, with whom he is well acquainted, and who lived at 11 Nouree street.

"There has been some trouble over at my home and I want you to come over there," he said to Mr. Anderson. During the walk on remarks were made. Just as they reached the door Mr. Olson said:

"I shot a fellow; he's dead."

Call the Police.

Mr. Olson showed him the body and then Mr. Anderson asked if he should notify the police. Olson assented.

A few moments later Detective Scandeman Arthur S. Parker with Patrolman Crawford and Blasberg arrived from the Prior avenue station. Mr. Olson was very calm. He acknowledged to them that he had shot the man but refused to give any explanation, saying he preferred to tell the matter deveiope in the court room. He previously had given his murderer to Mr. Anderson, who turned it over to the police.

When the county attorney, the coroner and Captain Gebhardt arrived, it ordered to question Mr. Olson later at the station house he first refused to make any statement, asking that Attorney General Smith be notified, who, he said, was a friend of his and associate that he got the proper legal protection. Later he replied to their questions.

"It was simply the unwritten rule."

Asked to explain this statement he said that the trouble began last June and then stated his suspicions and his accusations. He added that he had been waiting for his time for some time.

Did Olson Lure Darling?

The question which is troubling the investigators of the tragedy is whether Clyde Darling, the murdered man, came to Oscar N. Olson's residence of his own accord or whether he was invited there by a note purporting to come from Mrs. Olson. The coroner's party was sworn Friday, but there will be no special hurry about the inquest until further investigation can be made to satisfy the authorities on this point. Coroner D. C. Jones said that small bits of cumulative evidence seemed to point very definitely to the possibility that Darling was invited to his death by his slayer. He said it was worth a thorough investigation. Olson continues his policy of silence.

Engineer Pleads for Help, but Comrades Are Powerless to Aid.

East Grand Forks. — Completely pinned in their cabin, which turned topsied over when it climbed a switch near Davidson, a few miles east of here, Joseph Hopkins, Northern Pacific engineer, and Hunt Hogue, fireman, both of this city, were scalded to death.

Flames later envloped their bodies which are still buried under the debris. McGowan retained consciousness for some time and while pinned to the cab he comrades who stood near by, but were powerless to release him.

The head brakeman, Farney, escaped by his good fortune in riding in the caboose instead of in the engine, as usual. Sam Campbell, conductor, and William Hogan, rear brakeman, also escaped unhjured.

The engine was hauling west-bound freight No. 633 from the Twin Cities to Winnipeg. It was made up of 40 cars of merchandise, and consisted of six west into the ditch and immediately caught fire.

Six cars were destroyed, including one tank car of kerosene, two cars of coal, one car of gasoline cans, one car of merchandise and one car of wire. The kerosene tank car burned fiercely but did not explode.

Independent Mining Companies Taking Leases Near Grand Rapids, Minn.

The land is in the same district in which options have been taken on eleven forty-acre tracts by the Jones & Laughlin people, and on which development will begin in the spring.

The land was bonded and the lease is lease to the so-called steel trust, and has been proved up by the drills, more than 45,000,000 tons of ore having been shown.

Ice Is Moving Out.

Duluth.—The enormous field of ice outside the harbor has commenced to move out into the lake. A strong northwest wind has started the ice field from the shore and it is now moving rapidly in the direction of the lake. Navigation is therefor predicted. A report of the ice is cleared for the day owing the entire Great Lakes has just been received here. This shows that in many of the ports the ice is of great thickness. Little snow is said to cover any of the fields.

Attempt to Burn a Church.

Alexandria. — An unsuccessful attempt was made to burn the Presbyterian church at Florida, a village six miles south of here. Failure was due to the timely arrival of the pastor, Rev. Nathaniel Leavitt, and his wife, who occupy a portion of the church as a place of residence. The fire was plainly incendiarism, there being no fire in the church furnace. Kerosene and waste material were used in starting the blaze, which had gained only little headway when discovered.

WARM WEATHER TURN FANCIES TO GROWING THINGS.

Dean Woods Asserts There Is Sufficient Moisture for Planting —Floods Unlikely.

St. Paul. — With the temperature reaching 84 above zero Saturday and 41 above Sunday, St. Paul has come to the conclusion that spring is imminent. The weekly bulletin of the weather bureau at Washington announces that the temperature all week will be nearly normal, with fair skies prevailing; so that a real taste of early springtime may be in store for Minnesota.

The warmth of the last two days has served to thaw out the seed companies from their shelves, and to cause the farmers and amateur gardeners' fancies to lightly turn to thoughts of seeds and hoe.

Dean Woods of the college of agriculture came out with a statement that soil conditions are most favorable for good crops. He declared that with a normal spring rainfall, there is nothing so far to indicate but that the coming year would be productive of as large crops in all lines, as last year.

"While the snowfall of the past winter is slightly below the average," said Dean Woods, "there is sufficient moisture in the soil, I believe, to start the crops through planting time. If a normal amount of rain falls after the ground has thawed and is in condition to receive it, I see no reason to believe anything other then that we shall have another bumper crop year. Of course, predictions at the time are at best hazardous, but at present, I can see nothing but encouraging signs in the outlook."

The heavy snowfall has obviated the danger of spring floods, according to Assistant Colonel Chester A. Lee, United States engineer, and he believes that only an abnormal abundance of rain within the next two or three weeks can result in an overflow of the rivers.

"Reports coming to my office indicate that there has been but about six inches of snow on the ground," said Colonel Potter. "This is equivalent to but a little over one-half inch of rain, and this is not enough to have any material effect upon the water level in the rivers. Our reservoirs are now low, and can take care of a great amount of water, so that I believe that it would be possible, in case of a continued heavy rainfall, to control the water and prevent flooding on the rivers."

W. G. Hoyt, district engineer of the United States geological survey, also said that conditions along the Minnesota river were not such as to make a flood probable. There is too little snow, he said, to have an alarming effect upon the water level.

FEARS TO DIE WITH MONEY.

Minneapolis Woman, Sure of World's End March 15, Burns Her Currency.

Minneapolis. — Declaring that the world is coming to an end on March 15, Mrs. Filip Petrich, in grief, lay wept and burning up all her world wealth.

She ordered a bill of groceries from a downtown store Saturday. It was late in delivery and she went there in a "started things" mania to the proprietor to call the police. When they came finally made the delivery and offered him a roll of bills in payment. As he had no change he refused, he refused the money. She then stuffed the bills into his pockets. He went back to his employers and told them of the bills. The bills totaled $70.

Detective Sergt. Hendricks was sent to her home. She laughed at the police, they pondered her the money. "The world will end on March 15, she said, "and if any one is caught with money in his possession he will go to hell. The rich will suffer and the poor will be rewarded."

TURNER SOCIETIES MEET

New Ulm.—The annual delegate convention of the Turner societies of the Minnesota district, comprising Minneapolis, St. Paul, New Ulm and Wahpeton, N. D., was held in this city, delegates from all of the societies with the exception of Wahpeton attending.

Fred Pfleaker and Albert Stelbohrner both of New Ulm were elected chairman and secretary of the convention. Routine matters of business were discussed.

Adolph Pallbaumer of St. Paul gave a German lecture at Turner theater on German folk lore songs.

The next annual convention will be held in Minneapolis. The St. Anthony Turners will be host at that. It was agreed that each society in the state send and a team to the national fest, which will be held in Denver in June. A special train over the Twin Cities will carry the excursionists.

Lies All Night by Roadside.

Ceylon.—John Fritz, a former of Tehanasee township, has not yet regained consciousness from an accident that happened about 10 days ago while home in the evening from Ceylon. He was found the next morning lying unconscious by the roadside a mile north of his home, with the double box wagon overturned in a ditch near by. It is indicated that the horses made the abrupt turn at a high grade and tipped the wagon over, throwing Mr. Fritz out, as that he struck on his head and suffered concussion of the brain.

Buys Parish in Burning Home.

Hinckley, Minn. March 8.—The farm residence of Michael Burbank, nine miles east of Hinckley, was burned and two of his sons, aged 8 and 10 years, perished in the flames. Burbank was away, but his wife made a desperate effort to save her children and piloted six of the eight in the family to places of safety. She was badly burned and may not recover. The family had retired for the night and had no warning of the fire until the house seemed to be literally in flames.

DOINGS OF THE SOLONS

Minnesota Legislative Affairs of the Past Week—Law Makers Hard at Work.

St. Paul, March 11.—Content clouds appeared on the transparency of the Equity exchange and the chairmen of the senate grain investigating committee, which threatened for a time to disrupt the proceedings, considerably yesterday's session of the investigation.

Once the sergeant-at-arms was called before Benjamin Drake, Jr., attorney for the Equity exchange, would subside. Another time Edward Hoffstede, one of the attorneys for the Equity, stated that the chairman of the committee had said one thing Saturday, and was saying the opposite yesterday.

"I go out doors with that men in a minute," said Senator Works, thoroughly angered by insinuations that he was not telling the truth. "I'll not sit here and be insulted by any man. Any one who says I am a liar will have to settle for it."

Mr. Hoffstede had said that Senator Works had promised to go on with the testimony of Mr. Benson when the testimony of Mr. Hinchliffe should be tabled. He was objecting because the committee was about to call another witness.

Mr. Hoffstede feebly admitted that Senator Works had said that the Benson testimony would be taken next time the committee decided otherwise.

Mr. Drake Lectures.

Benjamin Drake, Jr., took time to deliver a lecture to the committee as to what it should do. Mr. Drake had wasted enough time on the trivial, he suggested, and declared that he mentioned many charges against the Chamber of Commerce, asking that they be investigated.

"I went to object to this," said Judge Simpson, during the course of Mr. Drake's speech. "This is not a political campaign, and I object to all this speech. He made wholesale charges against the Chamber of Commerce and made many offers to prove. The committee decided investigation of the last few days as "trivial."

When the attorney for the Equity had completed his speech Senator Works said:

"I agree that this committee appreciates the lecture that Mr. Drake has delivered."

Russell in the Case.

The relation of the attorneys for the house investigating committee to the management of the Equity Co-Operative exchange were further revealed yesterday when it was disclosed that Mr. Manahen's place as attorney for the house committee was the result of a row with the Equity people. Mr. Russell was originally appointed counsel for Representative Jamin Drake, Jr., should ask the witness on the stand.

Mr. Russell of Madison, Minn., told the committee again that the prices the Equity exchange paid wheat him were lower than he had received from two firms on the Chamber of Commerce. He said he did not come to appear before the committee because he was in sympathy towards the Equity exchange, but merely because he could not satisfy himself the way the Equity exchange had handled his barley.

Senator Works, chairman of the committee, threatened once to have Benjamin Drake, Jr., and Mr. Drake, when the session opened, insisted on making a statement. He said he had proofs of money that had been introduced. He said that he had been asked how long it was going to continue.

"I'll ask you to sit down," said Senator Works, "and you can make your speech about the testimony. It will give it the necessary weight without suggestion from you."

"I'll just I insist," Mr. Drake started again.

"I'll call the sergeant-at-arms and have you put out of the room," said Mr. Works, at the same time beckoning to Sam Ryan.

The attorney sat down.

Ben Hagenbuch, the witness, was asked by Mr. Drake if he knew that some of his grain had been sold by members of the Chamber of Commerce to some of their subsidiary companies.

"I don't know and I don't care any such practice.

When Mr. Drake characterized the witness as "evasive and slippery as an eel" Senator Works again called a halt.

"We shall protect the witnesses that came here voluntarily from such remarks," said Senator Works. "I do not believe we have an attorney say such thing."

N. Olson told the committee that he had been approached by men who invited the car of barley referred to by Mr. Hagenbuch. The witness also contended that N. Olson, acting for the Equity exchange, refused to accept the barley.

St. Paul, Minn. March 10.—The house sat down vigorously on H. St. Dunn's bill, to tax street railways on steam railways are taxed, and thus the proceeds over to the state. Mr. Dunn's bill provided for a 7 per cent gross earnings tax. The committee on transportation recommended that the bill be returned to its author. Mr. Dunn was not satisfied with this; whereupon R. C. Dunn moved that it be indefinitely postponed. To turn the taxes on roll-type, opted exclusively in the cities would be unfair, he said. A dozen members were on their feet to indorse this view. Other than himself, the Dunn bill had no friends. It developed that not a single member of the tax committee was in favor of it. No voice was raised when the vote for indefinite postponement was finally put.

The house, Saturday killed the Pleas bill, restoring capital punishment, by refusal to reconsider it, by a vote of 51 to 49.

Representative Wescott's bill increasing the maximum weights on railroads to 6 per cent, was reported to pass. It is opposed by railroad attorneys who issued valuable bulletins on the kitchen-garden, and these bulletins may be had for the asking.

In addition to this, the beginner may obtain advice free and receive the assistance of experts on varieties and areas of the various vegetables and fruits necessary to supply the needs of the family. Some of the bulletins include a few groceries, occasional cuts of bed or mattion, clothing, medicine, labor and other necessary expenditures in establishing the equipment of the farm.

A gross farm income consisted of a city income permits of standard of living in the country equal to that in the city. Even if at the end of the year the family on the farm has saved nothing, but has lived well it is fairly on a par with the average city family.

The city dinner table looks best, but it all goes in rent, food, clothing, etc. But when nearly all the expenses of the family are produced on the farm, only its own labor. If the farm produces a cash crop and where the expense of maintaining the farm, the farm has an the quite comfortable. The area necessary to supply the needs of the family and to produce this product are specified. But just what is necessary depends upon the type of farming done, the needs of the area of the soil, and on market conditions.

In good seasons a small area of fruits or vegetables will suffice, but the prices of these perishable products fluctuates more or less violently. Sometimes the market is overstocked and prices fall below the cost of production. At other times frost ruins the crop. It is therefore necessary to undertake even the most intensive farming on areas that will insure, even in favorable seasons, to provide a living. The market gardener or truck farmer would be something like the following:

Fifty base, which, if well cared for, will produce all the poultry products the family can consume and enough for sale to pay a large part of the taxes. In the 1913 condition farm bureau's bulletin No. 325 is of interest. It gives the detailed management of poultry on one of the most successful commercial poultry ' farms of the country.

On a very small farm it is hardly advisable to raise calves. It is advisable, however, to keep at least one cow, and not more than one, unless the family is a large one. It is better policy, on very small farms, to depend on buying milk for Presbyterian Church.

As most of us grow up in our homes we do not know until later when we get out in the world that that there are those persons who doubt the life beyond the grave. To such those doubter we as Christians should give our most sincere sympathy. I shall on Easter Sunday morning try and answer this great question by the use of the Scripture, modern science and the experiences of men.

Sunday evening the Sunday School will render an Easter program, and on the S. S. is behind with its bills the offering for this service will go to that purpose. Let everyone do his best for that cause.

FRANK HAGL DEAD.

Passed Away at His Home Saturday Morning.

After an illness of two months, Frank Hagl passed away at 7 o'clock Saturday morning at his farm two miles south of Red Lake Falls. Though unable to work during his illness, his condition was not considered serious until two weeks before his death. Dropsy was the cause of his death. Two years ago he had his chest badly crushed by being caught between two loads of wood. It is thought that the injuries received at that time made him less able to fight the disease that caused his death.

Mr. Hagl was forty-seven years old. He came to Red Lake county from the state of Michigan in 1898 and had resided here since. He is survived by his widow and eight children, five boys and three girls, the eldest, a daughter, being 17 years old and the youngest 2 years old. Mr. Hagl's death in the prime of life seems most untimely and the sincere sympathy of friends will be extended to the widow and children in their bereavement.

Funeral services were held at St. Mary's church, of which deceased was a member, at 10 o'clock Tuesday morning, Rev. Fr. Ambrose officiating and interment was at the church cemetary east of the city.

TOWNS WILL BE DRY.

Bronka, Wylie and Oklee Will be Hit Next Year.

Though the townships of Poplar River and Lambert, in which are situated the unincorporated villages of Brooks and Oklee, voted "wet" in the recent spring election, it is probable that both Brooks and Oklee and also Wylie will be "dry" in a very short time.

The O'Neill roadhouse bill has passed the house and has been recommended to pass by the senate committee on temperance legislation and there is little doubt that the bill will be passed by the senate before the adjournment of the legislature.

The bill provides that county commissioners shall not have authority to grant liquor licenses—that there shall be an saloons in unincorporated villages. The bill is not aimed at places like Brooks, Oklee and Wylie, but it will affect those places just the same. The purpose of the legislation is to put the low woods road houses out of business but it effects all drinking places in unorganized villages.

Studebaker "25"

$940 F.O.B. Red Lake Falls, Minn.

The design and chassis construction of the Studebaker "25" is precisely similar to both the Studebaker "35" and Studebaker "Six." In quality of chassis material, methods of manufacture and care in inspection the "25" is identical with the higher priced Studebaker Cars. ∴ ∴ ∴ ∴ ∴

Because of these facts alone the Studebaker "25" is taken out of comparison with other cars of the same price. In every essential of automobile construction it is as good as the Studebaker "35" and "Six," and that means as good as any cars can be built.

In proportion to its weight the "25" has extraordinary power. For ease in handling, "roadability," we do not believe it is surpassed by any car at any price.

Moreover, the finely upholstered and deeply cushioned seats are extremely comfortable. There is no swaying across the road at speed as is frequently the case with light cars. The body is of handsome design, with ample room in the tonneau for three passengers.

As in all Studebaker cars, everything has been made convenient. The "25" is equipped with a gas primer, which does away altogether with the objection to hand cranking.

The Studebaker Jiffy Curtains on the "25" are very handy, and from the spark and throttle controls, which are on the steering column, to the 30x3 1-2 inch Goodrich tires, everything about the car is of the best quality, and will appeal to the purchaser who knows automobile value when he sees it.

The "25" is built, not only for the buyer who delights in accssories, but for the great American people who want an unfailing, handsome, enduring car at a price within everyone's reach.

The "25" is the kind of a car a man ought to buy, because it conforms in every way to the high standards of Studebaker reputation and Studebaker practice.

FARCY OR GLANDERS.

Any Suspected Case Should Be Examined by Veterinarian.

Horse owners should understand that farcy is simply a special form of glanders; that exposure of a healthy horse to a case of farcy may result either in the ordinary form of glanders or in the farcy form, or that infection from as ordinary case of glanders may reappear in the farcy form. They are not two separate diseases as frequently understood. Any suspected case should be examined as soon as possible by a competent veterinarian, for such horses are constantly dangerous to persons who handle them as well as to other horses. Human glanders is a very fatal disease.—Dr. N. H. Reynolds, University Farm, St. Paul.

SHORTEST SESSION OF DISTRICT COURT

DISTRICT COURT CONVENED MONDAY AND ADJOURNED SAME DAY.

If any one doubts that the citizens of Red Lake county are peaceable, the following people he should look up in the court records. The calendars for the past several sessions of the district court have been very light, but the calendar for the March, 1913, general session, convening Monday, was a record-breaker. There were only a dozen cases on the calendar and a majority of these were cases continued from a former calendar.

Court convened Monday and adjourned the same day. Citizens had been summoned to report for jury service Tuesday, but most of them were reached by phone and advised that it would not be necessary for them to report.

However, during the brief session several cases were disposed of. In the case of Lee Steinert vs. Ed L. Healy, Jennie Healy, John A. Duffy, C. O. Sartschal, heirs of Edward Langevin, et al, judgment was for the plaintiff. This action was brought to quiet title to the ground constituting the site for the Steinert Milling company's milling property and the company now has merry title.

The case of Fred Richard vs. Wylie Parsons Elevator and Terminal the company is pending in the supreme court on demurrer. The defendant company demurred to the complaint, which is contained to bring the court to hold that, admitting that the allegations of the complaint are true, still the plaintiff does not have a right of action. The court overruled the demurrer and the company appeals.

The case of Julius E. Lervick vs. Julius Pfeil, H. C. Doughty, John Landstrom and Carl Landstrom was dismissed for want of prosecution.

Four cases—Sievert Brewing company vs. John Rogers and Alex Swebe; International Harvester company vs. Wm. Landman et al.; Frank E. Hunt vs. F. E. Sullivan and Great Northern Railway company vs. Leo Steinert and Theo. Malgeras—are continued. The case of J. K. O. Sherwood vs. George Ernest et al. is to be tried at Crookston.

The case of Louis Stoff vs. Great Northern Railway company is an appeal from a decision of justice court. Mr. Stoff received a judgment against the company for $60 for injuries received in a race horse shipped from North Dakota to Red Lake Falls. The defendant company appeals form the decision of the lower court. The first case was continued.

The case of Anna Langseth et al. vs. T. P. Hanro is to be tried at Thief River Falls on notice. This is an appeal from a decision of the probate court. This case grows out of a dispute over the handling of the estate of the late Hans Langseth. For several years after the death of Mr. Langseth the business of the Langseth Mercantile company was in charge of T. P. Hanro. Though the business is said to have been profitable, Mrs. Langseth contends that it was more profitable than the accounting made by Mr. Hanro would indicate. It will be remembered that the case was on before the probate court a day load of the papers and vouchers of the company were offered in evidence.

The case of Sheerin & Alchevi vs. E. J. Dusterhoft, Merchants State Bank, Nick Hein, James Jordan, Eli Lashe, Theo. LaBlanchere and Wilcox Lumber company is to be tried May 1. All of the parties to this action except the defendant and the bank claim liens against the defendant's property, the Lovits theatre for labor or material furnished in the construction of the theatre building. The bank's interest is that of mortgagee.

CURTIS WON EASILY

Took Two Falls From Sailor Jack in Less Than Half an Hour.

In the wrestling match at the Lovits theatre last Thursday night between Loren Curtis of Halstad and Sailor Jack of Hatton, Curtis easily demonstrated his superiority, though the Dakota man's aggressiveness made the match a lively one for a brief time.

Curtis got the first fall in sixteen minutes with a scissors hold and repeated the trick in just two minutes. Sailor Jack's shoulders were supplanted to the mat either time. He did not break the hold and granted his acknowledgment of the fact.

Curtis offers a handsome purse and what seems to many people a pleasing proposition to meet the winner of Thief River Falls in which Sailor Jack got the decision and during the progress of which the referee made the spectacular mistake to match welfare. Both of the contestants insist that the Thief River match was "on the square." Curtis says that he was thrown violently from the mat striking on the hold and when he crawled back on the mat he was so brain sick and dazed that he could pay up only a feeble pretense at wrestling. He says that he was too sick to go on for the second fall after the hour and sixteen minutes spent on the first fall. But, he says, he consented to go on and complete the match and Sailor Jack got him in a hurry. Curtis says he added to the story of the affair from the fact that he was thrown from the mat and fell into the pit. Spectators at the match, here commented on what seemed to be attempts by Sailor Jack to crowd Curtis off the mat.

In the preliminaries Theodore Dechamne and Leslie Lee put up a lively exhibition. Dechamne got the decision of the lower court. The first fall of five minutes and the second in fifteen minutes.

HAS EXPENSIVE APPETITE.

Young Son of Mr. and Mrs. Jos. J. Heid Devours Diamond.

Some people are born with gold spoons in their mouths, others dollars, but a habit of taking expensive fixings when engaged in gastronomic gymnastics. But Ted Heid, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jos. J. Heid, has it on all of the others made the scale show.

The little fellow was playing with two diamond rings that belong to his mother, yesterday afternoon, when he demonstrated his unhappy powers. Mrs. Heid left the room for a moment. When she returned the boy had the rings in his mouth and before she could get to him, realized there was only one ring. And the little fellow got red in the face and quite angry because she would not allow him to swallow the other ring.

It is believed that there won't be any serious effects. The diamond won't hurt the boy and the little fellow's digestive machinery won't affect the gem.

BROUGHT HERE FOR BURIAL.

Mrs. Jos.Goyette of East Grand Forks Dead.

The remains of Mrs. Joseph Goyette of East Grand Forks, whose death occurred at Rochester on last Wednesday night, were brought to this city Sunday night for interment in the St. Joseph's church cemetery. Mrs. Goyette had been a sufferer for some time and within a comparatively short time had undergone several surgical operations.

Deceased was born and her husband were former Red Lake county people. Mrs. Peter Jerome is a sister of Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Bovin of Louisville and Mrs. Goyette is a sister of Mrs. Goyette of this city. Mrs. Arthur Day is a brother of the deceased and there are many other relatives.

The funeral services were held at the time of her death. She and Mr. Goyette were married many years ago. There are no children.

WELL KNOWN HERE.

Pat Sullivan, Riverman Who Met Death Was Well Known.

Pat Sullivan who was accidentally killed on the river drive at Grand Rapids one week ago last Sunday, was well known here, East Grand Forks, last week, and was known here. He was a well known and popular river foreman and in years past had charge of many crews driving logs on the Red Lake river.

Sullivan's death resulted from a fall from a bridge thirty feet to the ice below. He and a companion were crossing the bridge when Sullivan turned to answer a question that his friend asked and the next instant he plunged from the bridge. It is believed that what caused him to lose his balance was that he had been suddenly dizzy, or missed his step when he turned. He may have stumbled over a spike in the bridge stringer.

CASHMAN BILL IS NOW A LAW

GOVERNOR PROMPTLY SIGNED DISTANCE TARIFF MEASURE. LEGISLATURE ACTIVE.

(Special Correspondence.)

St. Paul, March 24.—Governor Eberhart has signed the Cashman distance tariff bill, affixed his signature to the new reapportionment act and with pen poised awaits the coming of the initiative and referendum amendment. It has passed both houses and only needs to be enrolled to make it a law. Not in a decade, perhaps, have as many important progressive measures been turned out by a Minnesota legislature in so short a time and the leaders are congratulating themselves because of the fact. To them and a majority of the members of the two bodies it was a red letter week in Minnesota's history. Nor was this all. R. C. Dunn of Princeton, with that fighting spirit which has always characterized his many successful fights through the house a new automobile license bill which will go far toward aiding the cause of good roads, and the senate, set to be considered, sent to the governor a bill giving civil service to Minneapolis. This letter act alone will free fully 5,000 municipal employes from political bondage. Who pulling for jobs in that city will be in disfavor from now on.

\+ \+ \+

One of the surprises of the week was the promptness with which Governor Eberhart affixed his signature to the distance tariff bill. The time intervening between its receipt by the governor and the giving of his approval was less than two hours. It was expected that there would be a flood of protests against the bill and that the governor, in deference to the showing made by business men who believed that the act would be harmful to their interests, would veto it. In fact this belief was so strong about the capitol building that bets were made that he would veto it. The expected pressure failed to materialize. St. Paul and Minneapolis business men, who were the most active in opposing the bill, evidently agreed to take their medicine, as none of them appeared to urge the matter with the executive. Many think Governor Eberhart got the bill out of the way as quick as he did in order to save himself the embarrassment of a lot of protests, but my hunch is that he would have signed it protests or no protests. It would have meant political suicide to do otherwise.

EXHIBITS OF STATE ART SOCIETY

WILL BE SHOWN IN RED LAKE FALLS FOR ONE WEEK APRIL 14-21.

The exhibits of the practical art work of Minnesotans which the State Art Society started on tour in this state will be in Red Lake Falls with in a few weeks.

The exhibits will be shown in Red Lake Falls for one week, April 14 to 21, and will be displayed in the court house. There will be no charge to see the exhibits and all are invited to visit the exhibits on the dates of the display in Red Lake Falls.

The State Art society, which is a department of the state government, has taken this means of carrying to the people the simple facts about certain pieces of art that are directly related to the everyday home and business life of the average citizen. Art as represented in this exhibition is not the art of pretty pictures, but the art of material, practical things.

The people of Red Lake Falls and vicinity will see a large number of art products that have brought to workers not only pleasure but profit. Handicrafts of all sorts will be represented—the work which men, women and children do in their homes. There will be lace—such lace as may be seen at Delsarte institutes in New York, Chicago and other cities, and which prints from those who really know what lace is, many of whom, indeed, have ordered these products. There will be embroidery, weaving, basketry, pottery, wood-carving, metal work, tooled leather, etc.—all representing what Minnesotans can do in their leisure hours and some of the pictures of the exhibits will prove conclusively that art is not a fad or fancy, but a vital necessity. It will show, too, how closely certain home industries are related in the development of Minnesota's natural resource.

Among the exhibits also will be colored photographs of simple household furnishings, showing first those furnishings fantastically arranged, and secondly the same simple furnishings placed with regard to certain simply simple but important artistic principles. In one town in which a similar exhibit of the state art society was shown recently a local newspaper said in the week following the exhibition that instead of the parlors in this town are showing the effect of the lesson that was emphasized by these pictures." This part of the exhibit will be, of course, of especial interest to housewives.

The State Library Commission has joined with the State Art Society in this educational work. The latter has prepared a box of books relating to art industries, furnishings, home furnishings, etc., and these will arrive when the exhibition is on. Persons whose interest in any phase of art is stimulated by the exhibits or the lectures may thus obtain, free of charge, books relating to the same subject.

The whole exhibition and all of the meetings connected with it will be without charge to the people. That is one stipulation made by the State Art Society. Everything is provided by the society without cost to the city, except that local people pay the small expense of transportation of the exhibit and provide the exhibition place.

When the exhibition closes here, exhibits will be shipped to another city where they will be shown under precisely the same arrangements as prevail here. It is hoped and expected that the people in this city will attest their appreciation by availing themselves of this extraordinary opportunity to inform themselves about a very vital, but as yet little known, influence in modern social and business life.

HARD COAL SHORTAGE

Local Condition Is Distressing to Many People of the City.

The people of Red Lake Falls are experiencing the inconvenience of a hard coal famine, a condition that is but as effective as if the mines had quit giving forth the black diamonds. There isn't a pound of hard coal that may be bought and it doesn't do any good to try to buy for it. And there is no indication that the situation is to be relieved. Many local people who bought liberally enough early in the winter to carry them through to warm weather are escaping the effects of the "famine." Of course there is no danger that the people who need coal are unable to get it are going to freeze. Cord wood is still to be had and many people will be forced to dig out old air-tights, which there is a run on out of the difficulty, the situation is causing much inconvenience to many people in the city.

MARRIED THIS AFTERNOON.

Wedding at Wagoner Home at Two O'clock.

A wedding of considerable local interest took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Wagoner, on Elm street, at 2 o'clock this afternoon, when their son, C. Albert Arthur Wagoner, and Miss Ida Kemp, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John H. Kemp of Dugdale, were united in marriage. Rev. David V. Richardson, pastor of the Presbyterian church, was the officiating minister.

The young people were attended by Miss Lydia Eugene and Mr. Erwin Wagoner. The wedding was a quiet affair, the only people present outside the immediate families being Mr. and Mrs. Frank Wagoner, Mr. and Mrs. John Kemp.

The young people will live on Mr. Wagoner's farm in Grove Park township, Polk county.

MOST APPALLING DISASTERS

HUNDREDS OF LIVES LOST—PROPERTY LOSS IS ENORMOUS.

The most appalling catastrophies of recent years have occurred within the past week in the form of storms and floods that have cost thousands of lives and millions of dollars in property loss.

Sunday night a tornado demolished one thousand homes in the city of Omaha causing death to more than 200 people, injuring many more and causing an immense property loss. Other points in Nebraska and in Indiana, Iowa, and Illinois were hard hit by the storm, swelling the list of the killed to more than 300 people.

An even greater disaster is the flood that is now raging in Ohio and Indiana. Cities are being literally demolished by the torrent of water. Dayton is the hardest hit and there the condition is so appalling that no accurate estimate of the loss of life and property can be made. But there is no doubt that thousands of people have been drowned.

DEAD SHOTS MISSED THIS.

Teacher and School Children Saw Three Bear.

By not being out in the country week of town records Red Lake Falls sportsmen who are dead shots missed an opportunity to bag some of big game. The big game referred to were four bear saunttering leisurely across the country.

The bear were seen by Miss Bernetta Schusser, who teaches in the Sharper school, and a group of the school children. The bear were traveling in a body and seemed to be going somewhere. John Drier and a few other fellows were quite excited about the visit of the bear and caused to give chase, but at the time the representatives of the tribe of brute were probably in the next county and it was passed up as a lost opportunity.

MURDERER OF KING OF GREECE NOW CAPTURED

RULER GEORGE I., SHOT THRU HEART IN SALONIKI, DIES WHILE BEING TAKEN TO HOSPITAL.

ASSASSIN SAYS THAT HE IS AN ANARCHIST

Prince Constantine Succeeds to the Throne and Sets Solemn Example—Queen Informed of Tragedy on Steamer on Way Home.

Saloniki, March 20.—King George of Greece, was assassinated while walking in the streets of Saloniki. The assassin was a Greek of low mental type, who gave his name as Alekos Schinas. He shot the king through the heart.

Accompanied by Single Aid.

The king was accompanied only by an aide de camp, Lieutenant Colonel Francoudis. The assassin came suddenly at the king and fired one shot from a seven-chamber revolver. Schinas was seized immediately and overpowered.

The wounded king was lifted into a carriage, and taken to the Pe-Pafion hospital. He was still breathing, but died within half an hour.

Prince Nicholas, the king's third son, and other officers hurried to the hospital. Arriving first, Prince Nicholas summoned the officers, and speaking in a voice choked with sobs, said:

"It is my deep grief to have to announce to you the death of our beloved king and invite you to every fidelity to your new sovereign, King Constantine."

Prince Constantine Succeeds.

Crown Prince Constantine, who succeeds King George, is now in camp in Janina. He is expected to come here with all possible speed.

The assassin of the king is evil-looking, about 45 years of age. He refused to explain his motive for the crime. He declared that his name was Alekos Schinas and that he was an officer, who asked him whether he had no grief for his country, announced that he was against governments.

Fealty to Constantine.

When Prince Nicholas bade the officers swear fealty to Constantine, they shouted: "Long live the king!" Prince Nicholas is the only member of the royal family in Saloniki, everywhere. The Greek governor has issued a proclamation, announcing that the oath of fealty to King Constantine has been taken.

Tragedy Prostrates Admirals.

London.—The official world at London and the general public were startled by a terse message from Saloniki announcing the assassination of the king of Greece. Interest in the troubled Balkans has been waning of late days, but the news of this tragedy caused an instant and immense sensation. It was not generally known that the king of Greece was still remaining at Saloniki, as nothing had been heard of his movements for several days.

The greatest sympathy is felt for Queen Alexandria. King George of Greece was her favorite brother. She only recently suffered another, altogether less tragic blow, in the death, of her brother, King Frederick of Denmark. The Princess Victoria broke the news to her.

Queen Alexandra is said to be prostrated, and King George and Queen Mary will come from Windsor today to give her what consolation they can.

SAYS ATTIRE MAKES US "BAD"

OHIO SOLON ASKS, LAW TO REGULATE WOMEN'S FASHIONS.

Taboos Lace and Net for Trimming and Transparent Stockings.

Columbus, O., March 19.—Declaring that the immodesty of the attire worn by women is the cause of "a great wave of immorality now sweeping over the country," Representative Louis H. Cappelo of Cincinnati has introduced a bill in the lower house of the legislature providing for the appointment of a commission of three members to "prescribe the fashions to be worn by women in Ohio."

Introduction of the measure resulted from a charge filed with Governor Cox by a woman who did not give her name, that "immorality is practiced by married men in the officers of the state house and others here in the state of Ohio."

The proposed commission would be compelled to fix limits on decollette dresses, so that "not more than two inches of the neck below the chin shall be uncovered." Another clause of the measure provides "that transparent stockings shall not be displayed or worn in public places."

Another provision states that "it shall be unlawful to display or wear any outer garment trimmed or combined with lace insertion or any kind of embroidery made of net through which the color texture of the skin may be distinguished without having the lace or other transparent material backed with opaque material."

Members of the proposed commission, according to the bill, would have to be between 30 and 50 years old, but "not more than two of them would have to be married men, and "of good moral character."

One of the members would be an ordained minister, one a parent of not less than three children, and the third a social settlement worker.

The commission would be authorized to "prescribe rules and regulations for the designing and manufacture of women's clothing and to prohibit such styles and patterns of garments as the commission shall deem to be detrimental to virtue and morality."

The bill goes so far as to prohibit advertisement of dress from displaying undressed artificial figures. The bill fixes and the general public were startled by a terse message from Saloniki, announcing the assassination of the king of Greece. Interest in the troubled Balkans has been waning of late days, but the news of this tragedy caused an instant and immense sensation. It was not generally known that the king of Greece was still remaining at Saloniki, as nothing had been heard of his movements for several days.

MANY DENIED AID, HOWEVER, OWING TO RULING OF AUTHORITIES.

"A CRIME" DECLARES BROTHER

Says That Treatments Should Be Free—Man Dies of Pneumonia—Man Who May Drop Dead.

New York, March 19.—Dr. Friedrich P. Friedmann is ready to treat, without charge, all sufferers from tuberculosis, according to his brother, Dr. Arthur Friedmann, who declares that it is a crime not to permit him to do so.

Certain Limitations Imposed.

Dr. F. P. Friedmann has been refused permission by the medical authorities of the city to give his treatment except in connection with certain hospitals. Since his arrival here hundreds of sufferers have besought him to aid them.

"Many of these people have come from out of town and they cannot be taken into the city hospitals because they do not live here," Arthur Friedmann declared.

He told of a victim of the disease who had laid siege daily to Dr. Friedmann at his hotel for ten days.

Was Man Who May Drop Dead.

"This man," he continued, "has a temperature of 104 and 105, and is walking about the streets. He may drop dead in the street, but we cannot help him. Dr. Friedmann can treat only cases in hospitals and then under one of a government physician. There are hundreds of persons in New York to whom he wants to give his treatment for the benefit of humanity, but his hands are tied. He is eager to treat those patients, rich and poor alike, without charge. It is a crime not to allow him to do so."

A dozen persons suffering from pulmonary tuberculosis received Dr. Friedmann's treatment at Bellevue hospital. All are said to be in an advanced stage of the disease. Some of the patients who were called outside in the vain hope that they might be given the treatment, came in automobiles. All were turned away and only the cases previously selected came to his attention.

The Bellevue hospital clinic was an official test under the eyes of government surgeons. Doctors Anderson and Stimson of the United States public health and marine hospital service, and several noted physicians attended the demonstration.

From this clinic Dr. Friedmann went to the hospital for deformities and joint diseases. He examined 25 adults and children, learned their personal history and took X-Ray pictures. Today he will examine other patients and Thursday will treat those to be selected by the physicians.

Dr. Friedmann has received more patients were treated by the Berlin physician in the presence of Doctors Anderson and Stimson.

TEXAS PREMIER CROP STATE

ILLINOIS SUPPLANTED BY SIG SOUTHERN STATE.

Iowa Ranks Third, Minnesota Eighth, and North Dakota Tenth in Order.

Washington, March 18. — Illinois again has yielded to Texas the honor of being the premier crop-producing state of the union.

Texas held the position at the head, while Ohio has lost to Missouri the honor of fourth place, the department of agriculture announced yesterday.

During 1912 Texas produced $467,160,000 in the 12 crops reported quantitatively by the government—cotton, wheat, oats, barley, rye, buckwheat, flaxseed, rice, potatoes, hay, tobacco and last cotton. The enormous cotton crop easily gave Texas a big lead over the second largest crop production state, Illinois, whose aggregate production was valued at $283,336,000. Iowa's crop value aggregated $284,285,000, Missouri's $196,248,000, and Ohio's, $190,718,000.

In the second five, the states and ed: Kansas, $182,363,000; Pennsylvania, $176,276,000; Minnesota, $166,615,000; Georgia, $165,762,000, and North Dakota, $146,110,000.

The total value of these crops produced during 1912 throughout the country was $4,605,161,000 compared with $4,885,338,000 in 1911, and $4,496,647,000 in 1910.

In addition to the ten leading states the following produced more than $100,000,000 in the principal crops:

Indiana, New York, Nebraska, Wisconsin, North Carolina, Alabama, Oklahoma, Michigan, Tennessee, South Carolina, Mississippi, Tennessee and Kentucky. South Dakota produced $99,660,000.

$250,000 BURGLARY

ROBBERS SUCCESSFULLY LOOT A PAWNSHOP BY TUNNEL METHOD.

SIX CRACKSMEN INVOLVED

Saw Hole in Floor to Avoid Burglar Alarm—Hack Safe to Pieces and Escape with Rich Haul.

New York, March 18.—An East Side burglary, perpetrated by clever crackmen, netted the thieves the largest haul obtained in New York city in many years.

Pawn Broker's Victims.

Martin Simons & Sons, pawn brokers on Hester street were the victims. They declare the property stolen will amount to more than $250,000. Fifty thousand dollars in securities was taken.

Later, $40,000 in securities was found scattered on the floor of the vault, the robbers evidently having been afraid to take them owing to the risk of detection in their disposal. The thieves entered the pawn brokers' richly stored vault by means of a tunnel from a building abutting on a neighboring street.

The police are of the opinion that six crackmen were employed on the job and that the tunnelling required all of last night and the greater part of yesterday to complete. It is their belief that the robbery took place while hundreds of persons were passing along the street in front of the pawnshop.

A janitress, peering through the window of the shop late yesterday, noticed the litter near the vault and gave the alarm.

Police Find Tunnel.

The police found that the tunnel was begun in the cellar of a house in Ridge street, directly adjoining Simons' place. It was driven through the wall of the Eldridge street house and into the cellar of No. 194 in the other building store. There, leading up into the pawnbrokers' shop, is a flight of stairs. They were wired for a burglar alarm, however, and the thieves avoided the wired area by cutting a crosswise flooring at a spot in front of the vault.

The vault is ten feet in depth by nine feet high and is built into the wall, was entered by chopping away the masonry. Simons & Sons have been in business at the present location for a number of years. It was liberally patronized because the interest charged was below the legal rate.

Another thing—that seemed to point to the up-to-date business methods of the looters was that they left behind them three pairs of gloves. The police are of the opinion that the crackmen were gloves in robbing the vault, realizing the extent to which the finger print bureau of the police department is capable of going in detecting crooks who leave impressions of their fingers at the scenes of their crimes.

BEGGARS POSE AS BEDOUINS

Tourists to the Pyramids Are Often Deceived by Natives Who Ask Alms.

Cairo, Egypt.—To all who have not traveler in the east Dr. Hensen's fine figures as something historical and remote; a reminiscence of Bible pictures, a suitable subject for an engraving. In the days when we had to repeat poetry by heart, we learnt something of his habits from Mrs. Hemans's once popular ballad, "The Arab's Farewell to His Steed."

He stood in our youthful imagination as a romantic dignified and dramatic, if somewhat treachymose personage. In the illustrated editions of Mrs. Hemen's poems he was shown in flowing robes about to mount the fiery steed. We were most of us rather fond of that Bedouin as we loved Cinderella or Jack the Giant Killer.

Visitors to the Pyramids meet a rather degenerate modern version of the Visiting Bedouin in the Capital City of Egypt.

Bedouin and does not opt to compare him very unfavorably with the Bedouin of travelers' tales or of fiction. They generally assemble at the Pyramids, in picturesque of aspect and wears the traditional robe of voluminous folds and carries a stick or staff. He hangs around the tourist and offers his services as guide. He will not take "no" for an answer; he worries—he pesters. He begs for a piastre. After annoying the party for about a quarter of an hour he finally accepts a gratuity and departs.

The fact is that in nine cases out of ten these men who hang about the Pyramids are not genuine Bedouins, but clothe themselves in their costumes or escape military service. When Napoleon first invaded Egypt, the Bedouins (the genuine Bedouins of the desert) fought well for Mohammed Ali, the Egyptian. This potentate granted exemption from conscription to them and their heirs for ever. But to get this exemption an Arab has to prove that he is a genuine Bedouin by race.

Tradition claims that the Bedouins were the descendants of Ishmael. They are extremely learned in matters of genealogy and very particular in matters of tribe, family and connections. A Bedouin child is taught his genealogy and can repeat his descent for many generations. The Bedouin families are proud people the closer the world.

The claims to long descent of the Howards or even of the Courtenays are things of yesterday beside the noble antiquity of the Bedouin family tree.

$14,000,000 SENT TO BRITAIN

Postal Orders Totaling $35,000,000 Received in United Kingdom From America and Colonies.

London.—Sir Henniker Heaton, who was largely responsible for the introduction of penny postage between the United Kingdom and America, has been between England and America, has been gathering statistics which show that last year $35,000,000 was received by the United Kingdom from America and the colonies in postal orders.

Some of this money, of course, was in payment for goods sold, but Heaton her estimates that by far the larger portion was sent as Christmas and Easter presents by those who have prospered across the waters to poorer relatives at home.

From the United States alone there came over $14,000,000, of which $5,000,000 was for Ireland. Canada sent $13,000,000, Australia $2,000,000, India $1,700,000, South Africa $4,000,000 and other colonies $1,300,000.

MAN WALKED ON HOT IRON

Then, to Further Prove That He Was "Immortal," Shaved His Head and Tried to Swallow Hot Rod.

Although he declared that he felt no pain, it was evident that he was suffering keenly. The fibee of the workmen angered Fries and he snatched up a red-hot rod and tried to force it down his throat. The workmen, however, interfered. When a policeman was called, Fries bit him on the nose.

On Saturday and Sunday 300 boys between the ages of 15 and 19 representing several hundred of Minnesota's Sunday schools, will hold a congress in a centrally located church. Alexander of New York, the world's greatest boy specialist, will lead them.

Eleven specialties of international reputation have been engaged as lecturers and instructors for the convention and its "School of Methods." More than fifty persons will participate in the program. Each of the most noted Sunday school workers of Minnesota will be on the list of speakers.

Entertainment.

Duluth will extend its hospitality on the Harvard plan (lodging and breakfast) to all official delegates. This will be its first "Official Delegate" convention. Pastors, superintendents, county and district officers are delegates by virtue of their office and become official delegates when their credential is signed by the general secretary. Each Sunday school is entitled to one delegate for every fifty pupils enrolled or fraction thereof.

Dies at Hospital Door.

St. Paul—A tragic series of mistakes that easily might have been avoided brought about the death of Peter Carnine at the door of the city hospital after he had been driven in a buggy over seven and a half miles of country road in search of medical attendance. He was stricken with heart trouble two days ago in a rural house at Lake Owasso, where he had been employed for the last three weeks doing odd jobs of carpentry. Three miles from the place where he began his death journey, and nearly reached by telephone, were friends of thirty years' standing, but they were not told of his illness until too late to aid. They will see to it, however, that he gets a decent burial. They are the family of George McCarthy, who arranged the funeral.

PLAN 24 UNIVERSITY WEEKS,

Extensive Division Arranges Programs for Shorter Cities This Summer.

Firemen Turn Stokers.

St. Paul—Firemen of Assistant Chief Iverlin's command were turned into stokers Sunday when, to reach a fire in the boiler room of the Northwestern Electric company at Fourth and Sibley streets, they had to shovel many tons of coal that was stored in a bin. The blaze probably was due to spontaneous combustion. A particular alarm brought the assistant chief, Engine No. 2, the fire squad and Truck No. 2. The firemen fought the blaze two hours.

2 DIE IN AUTOMOBILE GARAGE

ENGINE STILL RUNNING WHEN BROTHER OPENS DOOR.

Gas From the Car the Only Asphyxiant in the Building.

Minneapolis. — M. O. Hoglund and Nels Larson were found dead in their automobile repair shop at 726 Eleventh avenue south. The bodies of the two men were discovered by A. W. Hoglund, a nephew of one of the deceased. Gas fumes escaping from the engine of an automobile in which the men had been riding are believed to have caused their deaths.

Hoglund and Larson went at 6 p. m. to the repair shop where they fixed an automobile belonging to R. J. Cagley & Co., contractors and builders at 716 Eleventh avenue south.

As nearly as could be learned, the men drove away from the shop and spent several hours on the roads in the vicinity of the Minnehaha.

They returned to the shop about 10:30 p. m. A few minutes later they were seen to the saloon of Oscar Johnson, a half block away.

Spent Night in Shop.

Deputy Coroner B. J. Shellett, who made an investigation, is of the opinion that the men then returned to the shop and decided to remain there rather than return to their home for the night.

The door of the shop is a tight-fitting wooden one and it is probably due to the tight fit that the men died. When A. W. Hoglund, nephew of M. O. Hoglund, went to the shop at noon he found the doors closed. He received no responses to his knocking, and then kicked the door open.

Dead on Auto Seat.

He found the body of his uncle lying on the back seat of the automobile. The body of Larson was lying on the floor, with his hands resting against his nose. He had bled at the nose, ears and mouth.

An examination of the automobile showed that the speed had been thrown off, but that the engine had not been shut down. It had run until the supply of gasoline was exhausted. The fumes from the engine filled the shop when the bodies of the men were discovered.

WAR VETERAN DROWNED

Joseph Couture of White Bear Found With Head Under Inches of Water.

White Bear—The body of Joseph Couture, 70 years old, a Civil war veteran, was found in the bank of the Lake Monday morning in seven inches of water in a ditch near the Washington school, White Bear. It is believed that the aged man stumbled into the pool and was too stunned to recover himself before he drowned. The fact had remained on the high bank. The position being such as to render the men almost helpless.

Couture was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and supported himself and wife on a food supper. He had been seen as late as 10:30 the night before in the lower village, and it is believed he was on his way home when he fell. Each Sunday found in weather during the past few days caused the ditch to gather considerable water from melting snow, so there was sufficient to cover much of the body at the bottom of the depression.

Friedmann to Visit Twin Cities.

St. Paul.—Dr. Frederick Franz Friedmann, who claims he has discovered the serum which he claims is a remedy for tuberculosis, is to visit the Twin Cities before he returns to Germany, according to Canadian dispatches. In response to a call from the tuberculosis committee of the Minneapolis board of education. It was recommended that the doctor be lengthened to comprise the hours between 9 o. m. and noon and between 1:15 p. m. and 2:45 p. m. Study of school instead of work at home also was recommended.

Farmers Hold Big Rally.

Jasper—One of the most successful meetings of farmers known in Pipestone county was held at Jasper, when over a period of twenty-one days as was done last year, the instructors this summer will be concentrated and more towns served by doubling the corps of instructors. Central Minnesota towns this year that were left out in 1912 will be taken in.

Women's Club Holds Banquet.

Clinton—The women of the Clinton Reading Circle held their annual banquet in the new opera house, covers being laid for seventy-two. The place cards came direct from Holland and the favors were miniature Holland windmills, typifying the country which the women are now studying.

Fire At Case Lake.

ERECTS $1,000,000 BUILDING

POWER HOUSE AND HEADQUARTERS PLANNED BY G. N.

Will Also House Express Companies Operating Over the Different Hill Lines.

Minneapolis, March 17. — Great Northern construction plans for Minneapolis, part of the work to start within a few months and part after the completion of the new passenger station on Bridge Square, will put nearly $1,000,000 into new buildings besides the cost of its new passenger station. A power house 265 by 165 feet having 6 smokestack more than 200 feet high, will be built in the rear of the passenger station on the river bank. It will herhaps in time to be completed about the date the station is opened for traffic.

To Centralize Offices.

A building either two or sight stories high covering the present site of the old passenger station at Hennepin avenue and High street will be erected, as soon as the opening of the new station makes possible the razing of the old one. In it will be housed the express companies operating over the Great Northern, Northern Pacific, Great Western, Omaha, Northwestern and Burlington roads. The building will be strong enough for eight stories and a plan is being worked out to bring under the one roof the operating and clerical forces of all the roads and express companies.

Gallery Half Mile Long.

A trucking gallery, sixteen feet wide and more than half a mile long, will extend around the sides of the entire terminal, from the track ends where trains will enter the train shed of the new station, along the entire south side of the present old station avenue, under the street and around the east side of the present old station, a total distance of more than 3,000 feet.

PREMONITION SAVES HIS SON

Father Fears For Boy's Welfare and Awakens Him By Telephone.

Minneapolis.—A father's premonition that his son might be ill probably saved the small Hoglund descendant of Dr. J. D. McMillan, 239 Clifton avenue, from burning to death in a fire which partially destroyed the McMillan garage early Monday. The clanging of the engine at telephone awakened Engstrom when his sleeping room was in flames, and he was not rendered helpless almost unconscious.

Engstrom staggered to his feet with difficulty, fell to the floor, crawled a few feet and sank again. A tongue of flame darting over him aroused him to his danger. With an effort he gained the door and ran into the yard. He was too stunned to recover himself before he drowned. The feet had remained on the high bank. The position being such as to render the men almost helpless.

Couture was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and supported himself and wife on a food supper. He had been seen as late as 10:30 the night before in the lower village, and it is believed he was on his way home when he fell. Each Sunday found in weather during the past few days caused the ditch to gather considerable water from melting snow, so there was sufficient to cover much of the body at the bottom of the depression.

Friedmann to Visit Twin Cities.

St. Paul.—Dr. Frederick Franz Friedmann, who claims he has discovered the serum which he claims is a remedy for tuberculosis, is to visit the Twin Cities before he returns to Germany, according to Canadian dispatches. In response to a call from the tuberculosis committee of the Minneapolis board of education. It was recommended that the doctor be lengthened to comprise the hours between 9 o. m. and noon and between 1:15 p. m. and 2:45 p. m. Study of school instead of work at home also was recommended.

Firemen Turn Stokers.

St. Paul—Firemen of Assistant Chief Iverlin's command were turned into stokers Sunday when, to reach a fire in the boiler room of the Northwestern Electric company at Fourth and Sibley streets, they had to shovel many tons of coal that was stored in a bin. The blaze probably was due to spontaneous combustion. A particular alarm brought the assistant chief, Engine No. 2, the fire squad and Truck No. 2. The firemen fought the blaze two hours.

Atwater's Club Reorganized.

Atwater—The Atwater Commercial Club has been reorganized by the election of the following officers: President, G. W. Canolgnam; vice president, N. J. Wales; secretary, George E. Johnson; treasurer, Peter Larson. The club has begun an active campaign for the town and is planning a series of market days to be held the last Saturday of each month, beginning May 31. The club has also taken steps toward securing a sewerage system for the village.

DOINGS OF THE SOLONS

Minnesota Legislative Affairs of the Past Week—Law Makers Hard at Work.

St. Paul, March 18.—If the senate cares, and there is nothing to indicate that it will take an opposite view of the situation, Governor Eberhart will be accompanied by his full staff when, with the surviving members of the First Minnesota, he attends the Fiftieth anniversary of the battle of Gettysburg next July. The state will pay the bill.

In the face of what looked like certain defeat as far as free transportation for the governor's staff was concerned, Representative Burnquist in the house yesterday by a bill carrying $15, 000 for expenses to Gettysburg with the anniversary, and successfully headed off a number of amendments reducing the amount. He got it by with a bare majority of five votes.

Governor's Staff to Go.

The bill, as passed, provided for the transportation to Gettysburg and return of the governor and his staff, all surviving members of the First regiment, Gettysburg veterans from other regiments living in Minnesota, and the two surviving members of the "sharpshooter" companies attached to the First regiment.

The flames were extinguished with a loss of $400. The occupants declared he had no idea what could have caused the fire. No automobiles were in the garage.

Engstrom refused to give his father's name, but said he had informed that his father had called him by telephone, thinking that he might be ill and need attention. It was the father's call that saved the son.

St. Paul.—Frank Lavatsky, No. 122 Hill street, is in the city hospital nursing a dislocated right shoulder, victim of one of the oddest accidents that has come to the attention of police surgeons. With several others Lavatsky was playing pool in a place at Seventh and Minnesota streets when the game was on, he suddenly dropped a cue. Real and Spurious Gems.

So nearly did the artificially sapphire and ruby resemble the gems which ocetur requisre centuries to produce that the expert alone can distinguish the real stone from that of laboratory origin. The reverend jeweler, who has himself had little experience in bandling these gems cannot tell the difference. He must take the expert's word that the stones he buys are genuine. If they are turned out by the laboratories of chemists in large quantities annually. In Germany and France sailing manufactured sapphires and rubies as genuine is so common that the jeweler's associations of Paris and Berlin have asked their respective countries for stringent laws compelling the manufacturers to label their goods.

HOW TO SELECT SUITABLE FARM LANDS

THE LONG ISLAND HOME HAMPER.

Hugh Fullerton, manager of the Long Island experiment farm, sells these hampers all summer to residents of New York at high prices, and says he cannot supply the demand. This line of profit is open everywhere.

(By W. J. SPILLMAN, Chief of Farm Management, United States Department of Agriculture.)

At no time in the history of this country has there been so much interest in farming on the part of city people as there is at the present time. In nearly all large cities courses of lectures in agriculture are being given under various auspices, and the attendance during the capacity of the largest available auditoriums. At the same time there is a remarkable increase in attendance in the agricultural courses in the colleges. The causes of this movement back to the land are many.

First has been the work of the colleges, and especially of the experiment stations, in getting at the principles involved in agriculture.

Second, President Roosevelt's country life commission had a great deal to do in awakening public sentiment to the question and in giving agriculture a standing in the social life of the city. This commission was the butt of the newspaper funny man and the cartoonist, but it aroused public interest in matters agricultural as nothing else has ever done.

It has opened all the popular magazines and all the important newspapers to articles of interest about country life and one of these nowadays without out finding something relating to farming. In other words, agricultural literature has broken into society and is now the social fad.

In the third place the character of present agricultural literature has had much to do with the present situation. The literature is becoming more practical than that of a generation ago.

In recent years it has given especial attention to cases of highly successful farming and to the kind of farm operated here and there all over the country, and the information has become general that by the utilization of the information gleaned by farmers in their investigations farming can be made highly profitable.

Furthermore, these men who have made a distinct success on the farm are now become a national character through the agricultural press. That is, there is a chance for a man to make a career on the farm.

The marked success of a few city men who have undertaken farming has also had an effect, and the advertisement these men have received has created a great many city people.

In addition to these influences, there is an inherited love of the human race for the natural, for the woods and fields and the prairies.

Some time ago the writer was driving with a party of city people through a beautiful wooded section of Maryland, on a warm spring day, when a gentle rain was falling. The leaves were all washed clean and there was an odor of the forest steaming up from the ground.

As we rode along the whole party was silent, every one looking off into the woods. Some one asked, "Why it is that it looks so good to all of us?"

Another replied: "It has not been for very long since we were farmers out there. That bed been their home since the time when they hung by the tails from-the branches of the trees."

ONIONS PAY BIG ON SMALL FARM

On Small Strip of Waste Land Man Secures Yield at Rate of 40 Bushels.

(By G. A. INGELSBY.)

Last year I rented for three dollars a strip of waste land 50 rods long by 4 rods wide, which I spaded up and planted part of it in onions. I raised 45 bushels, and the yield was at the rate of 400 bushels per acre. I sold my crop for $1 per bushel. Next spring I will plant two acres on second ground. The work is no more than raising potatoes and the profits will be greater on account of the less cost of seed. I bought my seed without any special calculation from a seedsman, and it grew fine, large onions was at the rate of 400 bushels per acre.

On this land I can only get a yield of 100 bushels per acre of potatoes, therefore, the onions are much more profitable. One of my neighbors went to a reliable seed house for his onion seed, and although he got a fine start and over 300 bushels of onions, they grew double and bunch as to be worse as ripe, and he had to sell them at a low price in order to avoid a total loss.

Because of the zone feature of the parcels post service the local merchant may by means of a systematic advertising campaign add greatly to his trade area.

The local merchant should not overlook the fact that with the parcels post he can go after the trade of the man who lives so far out that heretofore he was almost sure to be a liberal patron of the mail order house.

The new appointment makes Reed Lake, Pennington and Clearwater counties one legislative district entitled to one senator and one representative. It will be apparent to everybody that this section is not yet to receive the representation to which it is entitled. The Gazette is afraid of the opinion expressed before the last election, that just apportionment will not come until the state constitution is amended.

REPORT OF NORTHWEST EXPERIMENT STATION

RECORD OF WORK DONE AT CROOKSTON SCHOOL AND FARM.

The policy of establishing experiment stations in various parts of the state which are sub-stations both of the state experiment station, connected with the Agricultural College and of the United States Department of Agriculture, is a common method of securing valuable information regarding farming. The legal beginning of the Northwest Experiment Farm dates back to 1895. Its work as an experiment station cannot be said to have begun at that date. In the first place the land selected was very low. Many years passed before proper drainage was provided. This work required the co-operation of other agencies besides the state and was necessarily slow. There is still considerable work to do to provide a complete system of drainage. Until drainage is provided the station will not be able to carry on the experimental work that should be done.

Organization. This report is a brief statement of the work in investigation, demonstration, and research that has been carried on at the Northwest Experiment Station during the years of 1911 and 1912. The station is organized with an expert at the head of each department.

These men occupy teaching positions in the School of Agriculture and investigation and teaching form a very practical manner. In addition to all young institutions, has been the lack of proper and adequate equipment for the work in hand. A trained chemist in his field of investigation demands proper facilities, adequate pay and the best opportunities for doing his work. The agricultural worker requires the same. These station departments have required and will continue to require the services of the best of trained investigators, men who are familiar with their respective fields and who are interested in their work for doing their work. This substation enjoys certain relations with the central state station and with the United States Department of Agriculture that make for efficiency. That more experimental work has not been done here, has been due to the lack of drainage. At the present time the experimental work is conducted in accordance with the advice and suggestions of the state and federal authorities, and with suggestions from leading investigators in other states.

Poultry. The Northwest Experiment Station has occupied a leading position in the investigations of its Poultry Department. The influence of these investigations cannot well be estimated. Minnesota Bulletins No. 91 and No. 119 have been published giving results obtained. The poultry work is being continued along the various lines mentioned elsewhere in this report.

Live Stock Work. In the Live Stock Department an important work has been done in breeding up a high producing herd from common cows of various sizes, and in distributing breeding stock. The raising of pure bred stock includes besides poultry, two types of cattle, two types of hogs, and one breed of sheep. Two pure bred brood mares have been secured also.

A great deal of correspondence from farmers regarding better breed stock for their farms comes to the station. At the present time a movement is on to ship in several carloads of stock is well under way.

Agronomy and Pure Seed Work. The Agronomy Department was organized two years ago with an efficient agronomist in charge. During this brief period plans have been matured and partly carried out, which will make of the Northwest Experiment Station a pure seed center. Seed plots of pedigreed grains have produced their first returns. The most promising seeds will be placed upon "increaser" plots and within two years the entire drained area of the Station farm will be producing pure bred pedigreed seed grain. This experimental work requires skill, specialized knowledge and patient work. It can only be done here for the farmers of northwest Minnesota. The pedigreed seed will be distributed to farmers who wish to try out the best varieties upon their farms. Report of the agronomist covers this matter fully.

Horticulture and Forestry. The Horticultural Forestry Department has laid the foundation for an important department. Two years time is too short to expect much by the way of results, but the work is of great importance to northwest Minnesota.

General Crops. In 1911, 268 acres and in 1912, 137 acres were used for grain, corn, fodder corn, and hay crops. In 1911 two major farm rotations were begun. A total of 8,380 bushels of grain and corn, in 1911, and 8,940 bushels in 1912, including 1,000 bushels in the seed house. Besides hay and fodder corn, were taken off fields. Seed of high quality was raised. In 1911 seed ales amounted to $2,240. Excessive rainfall interfered seriously with the work in the cultivated fields during the fall of 1912, and the need of perfecting the drainage was keenly felt. The annual report to Dean A. F. Woods, of the University of Minnesota, Department of Agriculture that make for efficiency. That more experimental work has not been done here, has been due to the lack of drainage. At the present time the experimental work is conducted in accordance with the advice and suggestions of the state and federal authorities, and with suggestions from leading investigators in other states.

The accompanying department reports cover this work of the station briefly but inclusively. We plan to publish a full report at the closeof the present year.

DRAINAGE

The Northwest Experiment Station lies immediately north and west of Crookston and covers three-quarters of a section of flat level land. The land lying to the south, east and north slopes toward the farm in such a way that previous to the construction of any drainage system flood waters flowed upon it from this high land collected and stood on this area. The only natural outlet for the water is a shallow coulee running to the northwest and emptying into Lowell Creek No. 1.

Cayatan Ditch. In 1903 a capatan plow ditch was made east and west across the farm, emptying into the coulee. While this ditch took off some of the flood water, the outlet was so inadequate that it made no appreciable difference in the drainage of the farm.

Experimental Drainage System. In 1905 plans were made for putting in an experimental system of tile drains, also some open surface ditches. The county put in Ditch No. 6 running along the north boundary of the station and emptying into Lowell Ditch No. 1.

About one and three-fourths miles of open ditch was made on the farm to supply outlets for the tile drains. This open ditch empties into the county ditch at the northwest corner of the state property.

In 1907 the drains were put in on the northwest quarter and the southeast quarter of section 9. The north quarter was left to be drained with small surface ditches.

On that part of the farm that is now taken up by the school campus and farm buildings and yards, the tile lines were put in from fifty to one hundred feet apart, and in the northeast and northwest quarter the lines were put in from one hundred to four hundred feet apart. On the south half of the quarter the lines were put in from two hundred to four hundred feet apart, and in the southeast quarter the lines were put in two hundred and fifty to four hundred feet apart.

Results. Since putting in the tile drainage system a wet growing season has not occurred. After the heaviest rains the tile has carried off the water so as to prevent standing for rather slowly.

The surface ditches on the northeast quarter have never been completed. The tile lines were put in and were platted at the time the tile drains were put in, but on account of scarcity of help and pressure of farm work, the ditches were not made. While some of these ditches have since been put in by the farm force, as would be expected, the system has not yet been completed.

Farm Seeds. The rains of the fall of 1912 demonstrated fully that both the tile drains and the surface ditches will be needed. Until completed, the drainage will be undependable and unsatisfactory. The farm is very level in location and has a clay soil on which the water collects. The subsoil is a very fine clay and the water passes through it and into the tile rather slowly. If a good system of open ditches were put in to carry off the flood water quickly in the spring and after heavy rains, it is believed that the tile drains would take care of water in the soil.

AGRONOMY.

The experimental work in agronomy at the Northwest Experiment Station has suffered more because of the uncontrollable factors consequent to flooded fields than has any other line of experiments attempted. Numerous experiments have been begun on the various phases of field crop work since the projects were planned in 1896. The results previous to 1911 have been of such fragmentary character that they are of meager value.

The drainage work of 1906-09 has altered conditions materially for the better but it is still inadequate for the experimental work, the value of which depends absolutely upon controllable factors. The seasons of 1911 and 1912, up to harvest time, have been favorable as seasons of growth.

Experimental Work.

Crop Rotation. Minnesota No. 13 Corn in rotation yielded at the rate of 47.5 bushels per acre as compared with a yield of 46 bu., secured by continuous cropping. In 1912, wheat in the experimental rotation yielded 35.1 bushels per acre, in a five-year rotation 34.8 bushels per acre and in a seven year rotation 31.1 as compared with an average of 20.2 bushels on land cropped continuously to wheat. There will undoubtedly be a greater difference between yields from the rotation fields and those of continuously cropped as a result of the effect upon the soil through a number of years.

Rate of Seeding. The 1912 yields of wheat and oats are shown in the following table:

Yield Per Acre in Rate of Sowing Test

Grain	Rate Lbs.	Yield Bu.
Wheat	45	22.9
"	60	26.6
"	75	27.5
"	90	30.
Oats	48	80.1*
"	64	51.1

*Higher yield due to richer soil of part of field.

Method of Seeding. Winter wheat, drilled on a plowed field, grain stubble and corn stubble, winter 1911-12, was drilled on standing corn from which the corn had been husked, yielded 43 bushels and 38 pounds per acre.

Tillage. On rolled upland, 42 and 44 bushels respectively on plowed and packed barley yielded at the rate of 46 bushels per acre in 1911 and 1912, as compared with 17.5 bushels per acre on land plowed 4 or 5 inches deep. Corn on the more deeply plowed land yielded 56 bushels per acre as compared with 17.5 bushels on land plowed only 4 or 5 inches deep.

Corn. The work in corn consists in the breeding and selecting of Minnesota No. 13.

Alfalfa. The results of the variety tests are given in the following table:

Alfalfa Yield Per Acre 1909-1911.

Variety	Lbs. 1909	Lbs. 1910	Lbs. 1911	Average
Dry Land	4000	3200	2770	3490

Cure the afflicted members of your family, then tell your neighbors and friends about this remedy.

Every Farmer Should Know How the U. S. Cream Separator is Easiest Washed

VERMONT FARM MACHINE CO.,

Gentlemen: I am interested in a free demonstration of the mechanical washing of the U. S. Separator.

Any man or woman can wash a United States Cream Separator IN HALF the time needed to clean other separators.

Some users have told us that appearances are against the easy washing of the United States Cream Separator. They say that at first sight they were prejudiced against it. The object of this advertisement is to tell you why the U. S. is easiest to clean and how it will save you half your time.

The skimming sections are made up of narrow vertical channels, which are entirely open from end to end. When they are whirled in water the water is driven with great speed and force through these channels, carrying off all the milk and dirt with it.

This whirling process is more effective on the United States Cream Separator than on other separators for four reasons:

First:—There are no obstructions in which, or behind which, dirt can lodge.

Second—The arrangement of the sections which make up the skimming device enables water to be driven hard through them and in its passage to scrub off and carry away all impurities.

Third:—The use of nickel silver in the sections, a non-adhesive anti-rust metal to which dirt and milk stick less than to tin or steel.

Fourth:—The U. S. Mechanical Washer (see picture) which is far superior to anything hitherto known for washing skimming sections.

U. S. MECHANICAL WASHER

"It is an Excellent Device"
Lenox College, Hopkins, In.
Jan. 24, 1913.

The horizontal Rotary Washer has been received and put into operation. It does the work much better than the upright because of the fact that it can be speeded up so much more. It is an excellent device. We thank you very much for sending it on.
E. E. REED, President.

"An Ideal Washer"
Racine County School of Agriculture,
Rochester, Wis., Jan. 27, 1913.

The new Mechanical Washer which you sent some time ago arrived several weeks after we were notified to look for it, in fact it arrived a little over a week ago. I was so well pleased with it that I presented the matter to the pupils of the school at once as an ideal washer. It is the best I have seen in many ways and seems a great improvement over the old form. It is so much easier handled and the quantity of water used is such that it is more convenient to use.
JOHN A. JAMES, Principal.

Revolutionizing the Cleaning of Separator Bowls
Pine Grove Farm, Lakeview, Wis.,
Jan. 22, 1913.

I received the Mechanical Washer which you sent for my No. 14 U. S. and it certainly does its work to perfection. This system will, in my opinion, revolutionize the washing of separator bowls.

Since receiving the washer everyone in the family wants to wash the separator.
H. H. MOORE.

U.S. Nickel Silver Skimming Sections Are Guaranteed Not To Rust

When you buy the United States Cream Separator you not only get the best all-round separator on the market but you have back of it a stronger guarantee than that made by any other separator manufacturer. Here is what we guarantee:

First—Every United States Cream Separator is guaranteed perfect in materials and workmanship.

Second—The nickel silver skimming sections used in U. S. Separators are guaranteed never to rust.

No other separator manufacturer will give you a non-rusting guarantee. The 1913 model United States Separator, with its non-rusting and mechanical washing, makes other separators distinctly out of date.

Very Easily Cleaned and Rustless
Menominee Co. School of Agriculture,
Menominee, Mich., Oct. 31, 1912.

Your letter of the 11th inst. was referred to me. The No. 17 U. S. Separator with its new skimming device works very satisfactorily. It is very easily cleaned and does not rust.
C. J. Wendiner, Milk and Meat Inspector.

"The Sections Will Not Rust"
Washington, Ill., Jan. 30, 1913.

Referring to the washing of the U. S. Separator, I must say it is a very easy washer. The more it is washed the easier it is to wash. My new U. S. Separator is a great improvement over my old U.S. in washing. The old U. S. was used for ten years. I must say that the sections will not rust.
HENRY SCHALINGER.

Does Not Rust Like the Others
The University of Minnesota,
Crookston, Minn., May 1, 1912.

In compliance with your request I have tested as thoroughly as I know how the U.S. Separator No. 18, and am glad to be able to report that I found the capacity to be 790 lbs. per hour. The cream tested 39 per cent, skim milk tested .019 per cent.

We have three other hand power separators, and I am satisfied that the U. S. runs easier, does not rust like the others do, and gives fully as good results as any of them. The patent washer which you sent for washing the sections makes the washing easier.
F. H. SARGENT, Dairyman.

Answer us this. If you are using or are going to use a cream separator this year, is it not to your own advantage to use the "United States,"—the separator admitted to be the closest skimmer and the separator which has the greatest labor and time saving features.

We will prove it. We do not ask you to take our word or that of any other person as final. We will prove our statements to be absolute facts. Simply fill out the attached coupon and we will have a brand new 1913 model U. S. Separator sent out to your home. Try it. See for yourself that there is nothing equal to it. The demonstration is FREE. Fill out and mail the coupon NOW while you think of it.

PRICE as low as $25.00 Old separators of all makes taken as part payment.

The subject for Rev. David V. Richardson's Sunday morning sermon at the Presbyterian church will be "Remember the Sabbath Day." Owing to the storm last Sunday evening the Easter program announced for the evening was postponed and will be given next Sunday evening. The program will be given by the Sunday School and the offering at this service will go to the Sunday School.

Only those who have attended the entire course will be allowed to compete. The entire week's work will be interesting and instructive to all who attend.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES.

We all have had a hard time to settle down to the regular routine of work after vacation. After our first day we have "settled down" to finish the last lap of the term.

The Easter hat showed its effects Tuesday when nearly all of the pupils came to school looking sleepy.

Singing has stopped for an indefinite time, until some new music arrives.

Moss, one of the Juniors, has suddenly blossomed forth into a little man with long trousers.

"Ole" visits the Freshies quite often. Which is he, Senior or Freshie?

One of the Freshies told us that President Wilson had been governor of North Carolina. But you can't take a Freshie's word for anything.

Mildred recently burned her fingers with a match while playing with it. Little "Mike" shouldn't "monkey" with fire.

Misses Auetrid Kindseth and Blenkenhorn, who were at home for the spring vacation, have returned to Moorhead to resume their work at the normal.

Jeff Moe of Badger attempted to commit suicide last week, but the doctor with a stomach pump arrived shortly after Moe had taken an ounce of carbolic acid and the physician extracted the poison. Moe recovered consciousness the next day and left about as near dead as he cared to be.

Jos. Jam, who cam from Minot, N.D., two weeks after being released from the hospital following an operation for appendicitis, expects to return to Minot next week. He will take his family with him, for they are to make Minot their future home. Mr. Jam being employed with the railroad in that city.

Leo Spillman returned Monday night from his western trip. He spent some time in Moose Jaw and Swift Current and surrounding country but decided not to go to Montana because of the heavy snow. He will go to Montana a little later in the season and expects to file on one of the 320-acre claims offered by the government.

Fr. Adolph Dunning, St. Bernard's Catholic church of Thief River Falls, has been assigned by Bishop Corbett to take charge of the local parish for the time being and will say mass for the first time here on Monday morning. He was accompanied by Fr. Ambrose, the new Catholic church.

Dr. Rockford, head surgeon of St. Barnabas hospital at Minneapolis, was in town Tuesday looking after matters in this vicinity. Mr. Rockford owns one of the finest farms in Pickabarry township, having purchased the deceased Bodeen farm some time ago. He was accompanied by Dr. Ford who looked over the land with a view of renting it.—Plummer.

FARM HOUSE BURNED.

Family Living Near Plummer Had Narrow Escape.

During the snow storm of Tuesday night the residence of John Kriken, about 3 miles east of here, was totally destroyed by fire.

About two o'clock Mrs. Kriken woke up, and it required some quick work on the part of the family to escape with their lives.

The origin of the fire is not exactly known but the explosion of a lighted lamp is thought to have been the cause.

The family are now staying at the home of Mrs. Kriken's father. The house and furniture is partly covered by insurance.—Plummer, Pioneer.

REPORT OF NORTHWEST EXPERIMENT STATION.

ing on fall plowing and spring seeding on disced corn ground resulted in a good yield but spring seeding on fall plowing resulted in failure.

Fibre Flax. Samples of flax grown in co-operation with the United States Department of Agriculture were sent to Yale, Michigan, for determination as to the quality of the fibre, and are being tested for fibre quality.

Home grown seed yielded 10.1 bushels per acre as compared with 7.07 bushels secured from imported seed. Common Russian Flax yielded 13.6 bushels while North Dakota wilt resistant flax, yielded 15.1 bushels per acre.

Dynamiting With Deep Tillage Soil Experiments. No value was obtained because the fields were flooded in August and September.

Variety Tests Experiments. The variety test experiments include milling tests of wheat and variety of tests of wheat, barley and oats, for which observations were made of the strength of the straw and the length of the straw and heads of the grain.

Value of Drainage. We wish here to emphasize particularly the fact that the results noted in the tables above cover a period of time too short in duration to be a safe basis for general farm practice, that these experiments must be carried on for 5, 10 and better, 15 years, to indicate conclusively the right methods to be followed and the best varieties to adapt under Red River Valley conditions. To this end proper drainage must be provided and maintained in order to control the most important factor in agriculture that of soil moisture. Seasons of drought and seasons of excessive rainfall are as sure to come in the future as they have been in the past. Proper drainage on the heavy soils of the Red River Valley will better insure crops under these conditions than will any method of tillage. In fact, it is only when proper drainage has been established that methods of tillage can be properly carried out. Drainage strikes at the very root of our most pertinent field problems, weeds, alkali, gumbo, sour soils, proper preparation of the seed bed, timeliness of seeding, certain harvest and proper plowing.

Soil Fertility Experiments. The plans for this work were submitted to the Department of Soils of the University of Wisconsin and Illinois.

About 20 acres of land was divided into 144 plats for purposes of this experiment and a very inclusive series of Fertilizers and Fertilizer mixture tests were planned.

An intensive survey of the area is being made by the Division of Soils of the Experiment Station, at University Farm, St. Paul.

SYNOPSIS.

Bill Cannon, the bonanza king, and his daughter, Elena, who had just returned from a European finishing school, are accompanied by her father, artist and sculptor, Dominick Ryan calls on the mother to beg a big favor, but for his wife, and is refused. The determined old lady refuses to recognize her daughter-in-law.

CHAPTER III.

The Daughter of Hath.

He walked for nearly an hour, alone quiet, lamplit streets where large houses fronted on gardens that exhaled cooler scents and where the breaths of sweet, unseen blossoms, so little so strong that it seemed as if no earthquake might have severed up the city's crust and bent it crisply like a piece of cardboard.

He looked down unseeing, thinking of the last three years.

Who he had first met Beraice Iverson, she had been a typewriter and stenographer in the office of the Merchants and Mechanics Trust Company. He was twenty-four at the time, the only son of Cornelius Ryan, one of the financial magnates of the far west.

She was seven years older than he, but told him they were the same age. It was not a wasted lie, as she undoubtedly looked much younger than she was, being a slight, trimly-made woman, who had retained a girlish elasticity of figure and sprightliness of manner. The catrapping of young Ryan was a simple matter. He had never loved and knew little of women. He did not live her, but she made him think he did, threw herself at him, led him quickly to the point she wished to reach, and secretly, without a napoleon on the part of her family, became his mistress. Six months later, having driven him to the altar by her upbraidings and her apparent sufferings of conscience under the sense of wrong-doing, she persuaded him to marry her.

The marriage was a bombshell to the world in which young Ryan was a planet of magnitude. His previous connection with her—though afterward discovered by his mother—was at the time unknown. Beraice had induced him to keep the marriage secret till its hour of accomplishment, for she knew Mrs. Ryan would try to break it off and feared that she might succeed. Once Dominick's wife was thought that the objections and resentment of the older woman could be overcome. But she underrated the force and obstinacy of her adversary and the depth of the wound that had been given her. Old Mrs. Ryan had been stricken in her tenderest spot. Her son was her idol, born in her middle-age, the last of four boys, three of whom had died in childhood. In his babyhood she had hoarded money and worked late and early that he might be rich. Now she held the great estate of her husband in trust for him, and dreamed of the time when he should marry some sweet and virtuous girl and she would have grandchildren to love and spoil and plan for. When the news of his marriage reached her and she saw the woman he had made his wife, she understood everything. She knew the boy through and through and she knew just how he had been duped and entangled.

The marriage of her son was the bitterest blow of her life. It came when she was old, stiffened into habits of dominance and disciplined when her ambitions for her boy were gaining daily in scope and splendor. A blind rage and determination to crush the woman were her first feelings, and remained with her but silently mitigated by the softening passage of time. She was a partisan, a fighter, and she instituted a war against her daughter-in-law which she conducted with all the malignant bitterness that marks the quarrels of women.

Dominick had not been married a month when she discovered the precarious connection between him and his wife, and published it to the world. A social power, feared and obeyed, she let it be known that to any one who received Mrs. Dominick Ryan her doors would be forever closed. Without withdrawing her friendship from her son she refused ever to meet or to receive his wife. In this attitude she was absolutely implacable. She imposed her will upon the less strong spirits about her, and young Mrs. Ryan was as completely shut off from her husband's world as though her exile carried contamination. With masculine impercess of view in other matters, in this one the elder woman exhibited a singular unworldly small ness. The carelessly large checks she had previously given Dominick on his birthday and anniversaries ceased to appear, and masculine gifts, such as pipes, walking-sticks, and cigar cases, in which his wife could have no participating enjoyment, took their place. She had established a policy of exclusion, and maintained it rigidly.

Young Mrs. Ryan had at first believed that this terror would melt away with the flight of time. But she did not know the elder woman. She was as unmeltable as a granite rock.

Heroine, who had expected to play all from her connection with the all-powerful Ryans, at the end of two years found that she was an ostracized outsider from the world she had hoped to enter, and that the riches she had expected to enjoy were represented by the three thousand a year her husband earned in the bank. Her attempts to force her way into the life and surroundings where she had hoped her marriage would place her had invariably failed. If her feelings were not of the same nature as those of the elder Mrs. Ryan, they were fully as poignant and bitter.

The effort to get an invitation to the ball had been the most daring the young woman had yet made. Neither she nor Dominick had thought it possible that Mrs. Ryan would leave her out. So confident was she that she would be asked that she had ordered a dress for the occasion. But when Dominick's invitation came without hers, and he, surprised, told her that she was to be excluded rose clamorous in her. For days she talked and complained to her husband as to the injustice of this slighting of his power to secure an invitation for her if he would. By the evening of the ball she had brought him to the point where he had agreed to go forth and demand it. It was a fateful mission. He had never in his life done anything so humiliating. The shame and distress he had hoped that his mother would give it to him without urging, and Beraice, pleased, would be restored to good humor and leave him at peace. That could not have gained much power over him, or so best him to her bidding, had she not given him a talisman of guilty obligation to work on. She continually reminded him of how "wrong" he had been, and how, through him, she had lost place among them. All these slights, snubs and insults were his doing, and he felt that this was true. To-night he had gone forth in dogged desperation. Not for fear, timid fear of her, he went home, slowly, with reluctant feet, his head held in a manner that dread colder as he neared the house.

It was one of those wooden structures on Sacramento Street not far from Van Ness Avenue where the prosperity of socially-aspiring people themselves into a floor of seven rooms, and derive satisfaction from the proximity of their distinguished neighbors who may not know them, it contained four flats, each with a parlor hep-window and a front door, and the whole in delightful juxtaposition at the top of a flight to six mantle steps.

Dominick's was the top flat; he had to ascend a long, carpeted stairway with a turn halfway up to get to it. Now, looking at the hap-window, he saw the gleaming brass below and drawn blinds. Berny was still up. A lingering hope that she might have gone to bed died, and his access of relief was so great, so fierce and made him feel slightly sick. He was tired, however, and he had to go up. Pitying his fate in his knightly judgment at the top of a flight to six mantle steps.

He was tired, however, and he had to go up. Pitying his fate in his knightly judgment at the top of a flight to six mantle steps.

It was very quiet as he mounted the long stairs, but, as he drew near the top, he became aware of a windy, whistling noise and looking into the room near the stair-head saw that all the lights were lit and turned on to full sock, and that the gas, rushing out from the burners in a ragged line, ser of flame, made the sound. He was about to enter and lower it when he heard his wife's voice issuing from the open door of her room.

"If that you, Dominick?" she called.

Her voice was steady and high, though it was tired, with a touch of precise clearness of utterance, it was not conspicuously wrathful.

He Invited Down Unseeing, Thinking of the Last Three Years—

"Yes," he answered, "it's I," and he forgot the gas-jets and walked up the hall. He did not notice that in the other rooms he passed the gas was turned on in the same manner. The whistling rush of its escape made a noise like an excited, unresting pride in the confined limits of the little flat.

The door of Berny's room was open, and under a blaze of light from the chandelier and the side lights of the hornets she was sitting in a rocking chair facing the foot of the bed. She held in her hand a walking-stick of Dominick's and with this she had been making long scratches across the footboard, which was of walnut and was scarred back and forth, like a rock scraped by the passage of a glacier. As Dominick entered, she desisted, ceased rocking, and turned to look at him. She had an air of taut, springish impudence, and was smiling a little.

"Well, Dominick," she said jauntily, "you're late."

"Yes, I believe I am," he answered. "I did not come straight back."

"Took a walk," she said, turning to the bed and beginning to rock. "It's a queer sort of hour to choose for walking," and lifting the cane she recommenced her occupation of scratching the foot-board with it, tracing long, parabolic curves across the satin expanse, watching the cane's up with her head tilted to one side. Dominick, who was not looking at her, did not notice the noise.

"Beraice," she said, treating a great arc from one side to the other, "that you were with your loving family—opening the bell probably."

He did not move, but said quietly, "It was impossible to get the invitation, Berny. I tried to do it and was refused. I want you to understand that as long as I live I'll never do a thing like that again."

"Oh, yes, yes with," she said laughing and shaking her head like an amused child. "Oh, yes, you will. She threw her head back and, looking at the ceiling, laughed still louder with a note of fierceness in the sound. "You'll do it and lots more things like it. You'll do it if I want you to, Dominick Ryan."

He did not answer. She hitched her chair closer to the bed as if to give force to an engrossing pastime, and with a fulcrum of guilty obligation to work on. She continually reminded him of how "wrong" he had been, and how, through him, she had lost place among them. All these slights, snubs and insults were his doing, and he felt that this was true. WILL BE THE WORLD'S BIGGEST BATTLESHIP

U. S. Pennsylvania.

This is the navy department's official sketch of the battleship Pennsylvania, which will be larger than any other warship ever built by any nation. Its tonnage will be 31,400, its length 600 feet and its beam 97 feet, which is almost the limit for safe passage through the Panama canal locks. The total cost of the Pennsylvania ready for service will be about $14,000,000.

GRAVE POST FOUND

Marker at Burial Place of Illinois Pioneer Uncovered.

One Present at Ceremony Tells of Weird Rites of Fox Indians in Placing Memorial Over Grave of Col. George Davenport.

Rock Island, Ill.—An old cedar post placed at the head of the grave of a murdered Illinois pioneer by friendly Fox Indians, who mourned the death of their chief, has been uncovered in a heap of musty legal papers to the office of an attorney here. Though worm-eaten and partially decayed at the ends, the unique grave marker still shows weird traces that once were crude sketches symbolical of brief and battlefield achievements.

A band of prairie brigands swooped down upon the home of Col. George Davenport, a wealthy settler who owned the island in the Mississippi on which the government arsenal is now built, and murdered him. The crime, committed July 4, 1845, is recalled by old residents in Rock Island and Davenport town, which town, by the way, is named after the victim. About the same time that one of the murderers was hanged for the bloody deed some Fox Indians who, through their dealings with Davenport, had come to have a deep friendship for him, fashioned this old cedar grave post and erected it at the head of his grave.

For some years the post marked the grave of Colonel Davenport. Then his body was removed to a family lot in Chiplanook cemetery, south of Rock Island, and for years the old grave post of the Indians was thought to be lost. Recently it was discovered when the musty contents of an old law office were moved into modern quarters. The founder of the firm had been Davenport's attorney.

The weird rites with which the Indians planted the grave post are now related by one who was present at the ceremony and to whom, according to his statement, the facts stand out in his memory as clearly as ever.

"It was on a Friday afternoon, about the middle of the year 1845, that I went to the island where the Davenport homestead was and where Col. George had been buried several days before, I heard a band of Fox Indians with whom he had always been very friendly, lying in a circle about the grave. In the center of the ring of prostrate Indians, the head of the grave, rose a new white cedar post.

"The ceremony began when two of the braves arose and drew weird figures upon the post. Others did the same in pairs and in turn. A Sioux Indian, carrying a war club, advanced and drank to the health of the dead dent, then walked three times around the grave, delivering himself of most earnest exhortations. This was repeated until each Indian had taken part in the ceremony. The pictures that were drawn upon the post were to represent the crowning achievements of him who drew them and at the same time were meant to display the grief of the Indians at the loss of their friend.

"Following the ceremony of planting the post a huge feast was set upon the grave. A health was drunk treaking the Great Spirit to open the doors to admit their friend Colonel Davenport. Then meat of various kinds was brought upon the table. After the dinner several Indian dances were indulged in. I left the braves an exhausted camp, gathered about a camp fire, preparing further to do honor to their murdered friend."

WHAT THE CONVICTS SANG

Missionary Tells of Prisoners Singing Song That Was in Marked Contrast to Their Condition.

London—The unsuitable nature of the services in prison chapels has caused a protest by Thomas Holmes, a London police court missionary. "A few weeks ago," said Mr. Holmes, "I was conducting an afternoon service and before we were six thousand men, locked, bolted and barred in prison, with warders to keep guard over them. They were on their knees singing a vesper:

> Lord, keep us safe this night.
> Secure from all our fears.
> May angels guard us while we sleep.
> Till morning light appears.

"I at once remonstrated with the prison authorities, and offered to provide them with more suitable words, but they failed to see my point."

BACK NUMBER KING PASSES

"Jake" Finds New Yorkers Don't Care for Newspapers of Past Age and Retires From Business.

New York.—"Jake, the Back Number King," has gone out of business, according to notice posted at his Park row stand. His collection of more than 85,000 back numbers of newspapers—in the accumulation of which he has spent the past twelve years, with occasional lucky sales at high prices—he has sold to, a paper mill for the paltry sum of $37.50.

At back number rates Jake would have got a million dollars for the papers, he estimates, but this isn't a "back number age," he has learned. "People don't care any more for the past because they are too busy thinking of the future. I could name any sum I wanted for a copy of a newspaper three years hence, but nobody cares a rap for a paper three years old."

The highest price "Jake" ever got

WOMEN PLAN A UNIQUE BANK

Suffragettes of New York to Have Financial Institution With Only Their Sex Employed.

New York.—According to proposals and plans now under consideration here, New York in the near future is likely to have the country's first suffragette bank, a real financial institution which will operate like any other except for the fact that from president down to coffee boy or janitress every position of office girl, only women will be concerned with its management and operation.

Many attempts and proposals have been made before by women identified with the suffrage movement both here and in England to start such an institution, but for one reason or another they have failed to be productive of any definite results.

The women behind the present plan, however, believe that this time they will be successful. Just what the plan is they refuse to disclose until the big meeting at which it is to be made public later in the month. As its backers are women of wealth, there is much curiosity as to just what they propose to do.

It is pointed out, however, that if they adhere to the plan of having no man connected with it, the bank will be unique in more ways than one, since it will have a board of directors none of whom serves on any other bank directorate—that is, unless Mrs. Hetty Green is made a director—and will thus be free from the criticism of interlocking directors.

Of course if a few of the city's wealthiest women should be asked to serve, this claim to distinction would be lost, but even at that financial circles are expressing considerable curiosity over the plans for a real suffragette bank.

QUEEN FOR DRESS ECONOMY

Mary Frowns Upon Costume Balls and Says Women Should Keep Within Their Social Roll.

London—To the relief of those whose pocket-books are not so large as their ambitions, the word has gone around in the select circle of society which regulates such functions that this season's balls are to be of a simple character and without the slightest suggestion of "fancy dress." The reason is that no hostess who encourages anything "daring" to the way of costumes is likely to receive Queen Mary's patronage.

The queen has not issued any official instructions, but her comments on several recent extravagant costume balls and amateur functions of an unusual character have been duly passed on by the royal ladies in waiting. Herself a simple dresser, Queen Mary has the strongest possible objection to extravagance and extreme fashion. For this reason the bobble, directoire and panier styles are never seen in the royal entourage.

There has no real objection to fancy dress balls, but the queen's caustic comments on what she termed the immodesty of the costumes worn by dancers at the recent Arabian Nights, Louis-impersonation and Four Arts balls gave little pleasure to the culprits, but great joy to the retailers of court gossip.

"No woman should dress beyond the limits of her bank role," is Queen Mary's motto and, although the dressmakers are by no means pleased, there has been a distinct slump in costly entertainments lately.

ONION SCORES BIG VICTORY

County Attorney Refuses Warrant for Man on Woman's Complaint. Against Vegetable.

Jola, Kan.—The onion won a legal skirmish here when County Attorney Forrest refused to issue a warrant for Willis Thompson, charged by Miss Lucretia Campbell, a neighbor, with permitting the cooking of onions in his home, the odors from which filled her room, causing her great discomfort. Miss Campbell declared that the odor, of onions was poisonous to her, and upon this ground she based her demand that Thompson be arrested.

The state of Kansas will not lend its aid to banish the onion from the home," said the county attorney. "Miss Campbell's remedy is an injunction issued in the district court, if she can obtain one."

Mr. Forrest paid a high tribute to the healthful properties of the onion, quoting Hetty Green as saying she attributed her health and wealth to eating the vegetable daily.

CABARET SHOWS ARE BARRED

Philadelphia Police Act on Theory That "Beer and Music Do Not Mix."

Philadelphia, Pa.—"Cabaret" entertainments are placed under the ban by police order issued yesterday by Director of Public Safety Porter. More than a quarter of a century ago a license court judge in this city laid down the dictum that "beer and music do not mix." Of late years this injunction has been obeyed more in the breach than in the observance. The presence of music has not been objected to by the authorities until recently, when the prevalence of "cabarets" caused the director to order an investigation and the issuance of the order.

The police served notice of the order on the big hotels and cafes as well as the smaller saloons. Managers of the former, however, declare that they are not affected and their orchestras continued to play.

STYLES IN CHILDREN'S COATS

Savors Simplicity Will Be the Accepted Idea for the Models of the Coming Season.

According to the Dry Goods Economist, simple tailored styles for every day wear are receiving the most attention in children's coats. Such garments are shown in serges, Bedford cords, whipcords, poplins and fancy mixtures. The collars, cuffs and revers are usually of silk, satins or cloth in some bright color. On the dressier numbers fingerie collars and cuffs are employed. In most instances these are made detachable, so that they can be easily laundered. Belts are a feature of many of the best selling models. Frequently the belt is sewn only in the back section. When the entire belt is used it is placed several inches below the waist line and is made of satin, silk or velvet. Plain or crushed broad velvet belts are considered particularly smart and are used with excellent effect on bright colored coats in red, Wilhelmina blue tan and rose. Sashes are also being used in a similar manner. These are frequently in black or of the same shade as the coat itself.

SMART SPRING SUIT

A spring suit of navy blue broad cloth with new button and sleeve jacket.

New Screens.

Many of the new screens are exceedingly beautiful. Those of embossed leather are much in demand. Except in the distinctly Oriental screens there is a reaction against anything like sumptuous decoration. When covered with the new brocades that show gold and silver threads interwoven in the lovely patterns of olden time the screens are much to be desired. There is a slight tendency to have the material employed for the screens match the curtains of dining rooms, libraries and bedrooms.

AIM SHOULD BE SIMPLICITY

Best Ideas for Dressing of Young Girl's Hair is Here Given From Authority.

In the Woman's Home Companion Miss Margaret Gould writes "A Talk With Girls About Their Clothes." Following is an extract which presents Miss Gould's ideas about hairdressing for young girls:

"In arranging your hair, I would bear first in mind, if I were you, not the kinds the shape of your head. You may admire the way your older sister or your best friend's mother wears her hair, but don't try to copy it. The more simply you do your hair the more becoming it is sure to be. Parting the hair either in the middle of at the sides is very pretty if it happens to be becoming to you, but if it is not, the soft wavy pompador seen without a rat is in quite as good style. The hair which is drawn back from the forehead in a low pompadour and continued back over the crown of the head, where it is then made into a little coil covered by a big bow, is very effective, only it must not have the effect of all bow and little head. The bow should be small enough to show two cunning little curls below it."

IDEAS FOR SPRING DRESSES

According to Information, Printed Silks Will Be Largely Used in the New Gowns.

Paris dressmakers are using printed silks of rather florid designs on soft silks and crepe de chines for linings, especially where plain materials are in question. All crepe fabrics also are in demand for home gowns, and with them the introduction of printed silks will take the form of collar facings and little touches in the waist-bands. Buttons will also be covered in small designs printed silk.

Sponge cloths, retine or velour de laine, all more or less in sans shape, already been seen in the material. The fashion in taffe mades does not just yet show much change. The lines are simple in the extreme. The inverted plaits in front and back, allowing of a little more freedom in movement, but retaining the straight line, is so far the only innovation.

Frilly Fashions.

Certain details of dress are being lately debated at the present time and in the end we shall all follow the whim of the moment, as we are allowed to do in these happy days. Last spring the new fashion of long sleeves was much heralded, which was a consequence the dressmakers tried to force us to accept when summer was coming in.

The fashion, so far as summer is concerned, was foredoomed to failure. But when autumn arrived, of course, the time of the long sleeve had come, and down it crept accordingly until now, when, apart from the prevailing frills, the material itself reaches down half way to the finger tips in the old familiar Barnhardt fashion.

To Freshen Ribbons.

Ribbons and silk can usually be made to look fresher if they are washed in soapy water, dried and ironed. If they are desired stiff they should be ironed while wet. If they are to be soft they must first be dried and any wrinkles which refuse to iron out without water can be moistened with a sponge wrung dry.

Montevideo, URUGUAY'S FINE CAPITAL

STOCK EXCHANGE.

"I SEE a mountain" exclaimed Juan de Solis in 1515 to his navigator who rounded from the broad Atlantic into the mouth of the Rio de la Plata and searched the northern bank. Juan Diaz de Solis is said to have been pulled and mashed by mede use of the expression, if he was personally on the lookout. At any rate whatsoever said it and notwithstanding the fact that the mountain is little more than a good-sized hill, the Latin expression stuck, and its two words, now welded together, form the name of the splendid little modern capital of the Republic of Uruguay.

Little capital? Well, yes—when compared in population with its two big neighbors, Buenos Aires and Rio de Janeiro—but even at that not absent as big as the capital of the giant of all republics, the United States of America. In fact, in point of population Montevideo and Washington are very nearly twins, each claiming a nearly approach to the 400,000 mark. However, the impression made upon the tourist is that there is nothing small about the Uruguayan capital. Its fine, substantial houses are large, its streets are wide and well paved, and its parks and plazas are beautiful and spacious, while the liberal hospitality of the people makes what their hearts are large as well.

Ideal Situation.

The city has an ideal location on a fine bay, the eastern side facing the Atlantic and the western entering the Rio de la Plata. It is built on a peninsula that cuts into the bay and forms the eastern extremity of this magnificent bay which forms the actual port, while on the ocean side the coast sweeps directly north for miles in a direction, and it is here that its cool covered by a big bow, is its cold covered by a big bow, is very effective, only it must not have the effect of all bow and little head. The bow should be small enough to show two cunning little curls below it."

more than passing notice, for it is one of the most interesting and instructive places to all South America. Here are gathered specimens of Uruguayan art, natural history, geology and hundreds of objects of historical interest. The collection of Indian "relics" alone is a remarkable exhibition, for among the hundreds of these primitive weapons may be found specimens of every stone formation known in this section of the continent. Other weapons and primitive utensils of the aboriginal tribes found in the country, mounted specimens of the fauna of the country, relics of the wars of colonial days, and in the art gallery paintings by the early Uruguayan artists, as well as some of the old masters of Europe, may be seen. Several days could have been spent here in profitable study and enjoyment, but only a hasty glance was vouchsafed to those who were trying to see something of Montevideo in less than two days.

Modern Business Houses.

From the Plaza Independencia our route lay up the fine Calle 18 de Julio, the street whose name perpetuates the date of the adoption of a constitution. This we found to be a broad street, lined with a succession of modern business houses.

The first residential section of the city we saw in the Punta del Molino, and all were most favorably impressed by the clean, carefully kept villas invariably set in gardens of flowers. One of the handsomest structures we passed was that of the Asturian Legation. From the Paseo we drove through a double line of fine eucalyptus trees to the Prado, the Bois de Boulogne of Montevideo. This park is the pride of the busy, thriving citizens of Montevideo, and very justly so. The rolling plain has been transformed into a veritable garden of delights, where groves of magnificent trees shade grassy dells and placid lakes. The well-known trees of our northern climes flourish with the natives of the remittopin. A grove of oaks was neighbor to a cluster of horsechestnuts, while the stately palms and stately bamboos might be seen close to the giant eucalyptus, and flowering shrubs and snowy water lilies lent more color to the scene. In many shady nooks rustic benches invited the weary to rest, and these alone, was needed to enjoy the charm of the seclusion offered by this beautiful place of the Uruguayan metropolis.

The route from the Prado to Pocitos, our next stopping place, was bordered with handsome quintas, or villas, set in exquisite gardens.

From the Prado we proceeded to that most fashionable of Montevideo's bathing resorts, Pocitos. Here we stopped at the hotel on marble plazas verandas we lunched.

The next move to the Cemetario Central. A fine chapel is located here amid the cypress trees and beautiful monuments, and it is in the large subterranean vault extending from structure that repose the remains of the hero of Uruguay, Jose Gervasio Artigas. We were permitted to descend into the vault and to see the tomb. Here also is the tomb of Admiral Rosendo Garzon, whereon is placed the urn which holds his ashes and a glass urn which contains the heart of the great soldier, preserved in alcohol, and exposed to the gaze of the visitor.

On the Job.

Herbert stood on a chair. The chair stood in the pantry.

The chair stood on the shelf. Herbert's mother stood on the threshold. Herbert stood on the ground.

"My sap," said the mother, pointing at him with astonishment, "I am so surprised! To think that my little boy would do a thing like that."

Herbert reservedly hung out at all abashed, looking his mother straight in the eye. "Please do not interfere with the minuvers of a boy scent," he said.

"A boy scout!"

"Yea, mother, after supplies."

The First Clothes Buttons.

The button as an article of use, and not merely as an ornament, may be said to date from the reign of Edward I. These early buttons were of modest appearance and were manufactured from bone to have two buttons stitched on the coat at the small of the back to enable a man to button his coat tails so that he could walk or draw his sword th more easily. These two buttons are still retained on modern coats, though any reason for their existence has long disappeared. As wealth increased, gold and silver buttons made their appearance, and to later date cloth buttons became very popular. Birmingham began to turn out metal buttons as soon as it was passed in the reign of George I. forbidding the manufacture of cloth buttons in order that the new industry of metal buttons might have a chance to flourish.

A Minus Quantity.

"When young Sapplejoh complained of not being able to make money, old Mr. Codgers advised him to exercise his wits."

"Ha! Ha!"

"Why do you laugh?"

"Advising young Sapplejoh to exercise his wits is like advising a beggar to exercise his team of Arabian horses."

In a letter from Juneau, Alaska, Ralph Healy writes that they are enjoying pleasant spring weather—that is,in town. At the mines, a few miles back in the country, the snow is still eight or ten feet deep. Juneau's warm weather at this season is due to a warm ocean current that passes near the coast. Ralph is employed as a mining engineer by one of the big mining companies and enjoys his work very much.

Some people have been blaming Rev. G. Buse, the local weather man, for the young winter with which we have been favored this spring. That is not fair, for the fault was with the weather-working machinery which was not properly lubricated. But Rev. says everything is working fine now and a nice assortment of hasa hall weather is coming along soon. You can bank on that, for Buse has spent his good money for a bunch of ducks on the strength of the good weather that is to be. You may be sure that there is to be some good hayin weather.

Studebaker "35"

Touring Car, $1350 F.O.B. Red Lake Falls

The Six-Passenger Touring Car Enters the Low Priced Zone

Notice first that this is a six-passenger car. Instead of the usual five-passenger touring car, the Studebaker Corporation has chosen this new but far more convenient and logical type of machine. The "35" a six-passenger car, with two seats of the disappearing collapsible type.

The body is long and handsome, the upholstering rich, and the cushions so deep and comfortable that it seems incredible that they can be placed on a $1350 car.

With the 116-inch wheel base, the Studebaker "35" really enters the big car class, and the price is much lower than any other big car which approaches it.

In the Wagner electric self-starter we have a device which has been developed beyond all the little difficulties which first attended electric self-starters. It is simple in operation; has nothing to get out of order, and will turn the motor 80 revolutions per minute for 31 minutes. Simply pull a handle on the steering column and your car will start.

The electric lights which are of a type identical with those used on the highest priced cars, are lighted from the storage battery, which forms a part of the electric system.

The springs, semi-elliptic front, three-quarters elliptic rear, are so placed that the car is not only extraordinarily comfortable, but has great "tidability" even over rough roads.

For power we have the long stroke motor, full 35 horsepower. The design is in accordance with the most modern engineering practice. Nothing better has been developed. Everything is accessible. The motor is quiet, as quiet as any motor ever offered, and with its 35 horsepower offers the driver an extraordinary capacity, both for speed and for surmounting difficult road conditions. Compared with other cars of same wheel-base, the "35" has far more than standard power.

Our type of full floating rear axle not only eliminates all possibility of axle trouble, but gives this car precisely the same construction as is used in the highest priced cars.

In short, the owner of the Studebaker "35" will be certain that his car excels in every way, and in body design surpasses, other cars of about the same size, which are offered at several hundred dollars higher price.

It has the Power, the Durability and the Appearance. It is Easy Riding, Easy to Handle and Economical.

It is a Significant Fact that the man who owns a Buick always gets the idea that his Buick is the best Buick the Buick ever built. That sums up in a nut-shell why when you find a Buick user you find a Buick booster.

The Company that Keeps up its standard of quality, figures prices on a cost system, and gives every man the worth of his money, is the kind of a company any man likes to do business with. A concern like that doesn't make any claim that it can't back up.

The famous Buick Overhead Valve Motor is guaranteed to have more power and more speed than any other type of motor on the market. It costs more to make it, but the fuel consumption is less and it will pull stronger on low grade gasoline than any other type of motor ever built. The increased cost of gasoline demands your fullest investigation, no matter what price you expect to pay for a motor car.

NEW STATE ROADS ARE ESTABLISTED

FOUR SO DESIGNATED BY THE BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

At the last meeting of the board of county commissioners action was taken establishing four state highways in Red Lake county. This does not mean that all of these roads are to be constructed this season. The action simply makes it possible for the people to have the roads if they want them.

Under the present state law those roads may be construced under proceedings almost identical with those employed in the establishment of a county ditch. The only difference in the proceedings is that instead of the property owners paying all of the cost, as in the case of the ditch, they pay only one-fourth, the county pays one-fourth and the state one-half. However, proceedings may not be started until a proposed route is designated as a state highway. The action of the board makes possible the construction of the roads whenever the people interested desire to start proceedings.

A full review of the new state highways are described in detail in the official proceedings published below:

FLOODS RAGE---MANY PERISH

Between 2,000 and 5,000 Reported Dead at Dayton and Hamilton, Ohio.

Chicago.—Reports concerning the appalling nature of the floods in Ohio and Indiana, which in most instances it was impossible to verify, were received here today scattered sources. The most serious of these were:

A report that from 2,000 to 5,000 have perished in Dayton, O.

An unconfirmed report from Spring field, Ohio, that 500 are dead at Piqua.

A report, apparently more fully authentic that from 200 to 500 had been drowned at Peru, Ind.

A message received at Pioneston, O., that the levee at Hamilton had broken and that 1,000 persons had been drowned.

The Western Union office in Chicago reported that its Cincinnati office had worked with the Western Union office at Lindenwald, one mile south of Dayton. At that time no mention was made of such a disaster and continued efforts at verification were futile.

An unconfirmed but persistent rumor from Marion, Ind., that the grand reservoir at Salloo, O., had gone out causing an unprecedented flood in the Wabash valley.

Vivid reports from Delaware, O., said that 75 to 100 were dead, but more conservative figures cut these down half.

The telegraph companies in many instances were unavailing efforts to confirm many of these rumors, but in few cases were unable to trace them to a definite source.

Four States Affected.

Ohio and Indiana, and in a lesser degree, Illinois and Missouri, felt the brunt of the disaster.

When the Associated Press correspondent succeeded in reaching Dayton, unduly excited by the exaggerated reports of loss of life was set at 2,000, although the list was cut down by daylight in obtaining details.

Aforesaid is office buildings in the center of the town, hundreds of persons were calmly awaiting rescue. Streets heretofore considered miles from the danger line, were running eight feet of water, the torrential forces of which precluded rescue by boats. Millions of dollars in property damage has already been incurred and the flood is still on the increase.

From Indianapolis came reports of 100,000 homeless throughout Indiana and a property loss reaching the enormous figure of $20,000,000 in cities, towns and villages alone. This does not include the losses to farmers.

The loss of life, while not so great as in Ohio, has not yet been estimated.

At Dayton, Ohio, where three rivers —the Miami, Stillwater and Mad, and another stream known as Wolf creek—join, there undoubtedly occurred loss of life as well as destruction of property. For the past day the low lands on a level flat with the four streams overflowed almost in the heart of the place, and is protected by levees 25 feet high. The levee protecting the Miami river broke about 6 o'clock Tuesday morning and the flood was augmented by the rapidly rising waters of the other three streams and finally rendered uncontrollable by the breaking of the Laramie river, over 50 miles above Dayton.

Many Bodies in the River.

Governor Cox of Ohio reoffered a message at Columbus from Pioneston, six miles from Dayton, saying that 25 bodies had been swept into the Great Miami river. Many more supposed to have come from Sidney, Shelby county.

A message from Dayton said the Leonard building collapsed and many persons were believed to have been in the building at the time. Other buildings were expected to be undermined.

At Indianapolis, Ind., the first report of dead, many missing and 400 families homeless. R. V. Lees, mayor of that city, reported drowned, has been found. He estimated the death list at from 25 to 75.

Scores of unfortunates were marooned on roofs and in trees in the city during the town.

Muncie, a hamlet of 100 persons, was said to have been destroyed and the fate of the inhabitants is unknown.

Columbus suffered also enormous damage from the flood. The washing out of the railroad bridges across Scioto river in and near that city, resulted in almost total paralysis of rail road traffic early in the day. Late yesterday the water began to recede, and a large area of the western part of the city was inundated. Fires in three large factories, the result of many hours and for a time threatened a conflagration of the first magnitude. The loss of putting offenders on their honor is to be early in this particular respect, but if temptation proves too strong pledges and pedestrians will have to take their chances.

Conditions at Indianapolis, Fort Wayne, Kokomo and other places in Indiana were the worst in many years. In every part of the state there were loss and distress from inundations.

At La Fayette two spans of a bridge went out carrying several persons who were watching the flood. All were rescued, however, except two men, one of whom was L. P. Woolery of Indianapolis, a student at Purdue university.

Thousands Reported Dead.

Dayton.—Dayton is nothing less than a seething river three miles wide, a mile and a half on each side of Main street, its principal thoroughfare.

Estimates Large.

It is estimated that from 2,000 to 5,000 people have perished.

The Mosquito basin is submerged in water up to its third story, and above the level in the downtown district office buildings, hotels and business houses are places of refuge.

A school building that was known to have housed no less than 400 school children shortly before the waters rushed in that direction, is entirely submerged, and so far as can be ascertained, all of the little ones met a watery grave.

No Estimate of Dead.

Except for its most remote suburbs, the city is covered with water from 3 to 20 feet. Any attempt to estimate the loss of life is hopeless.

The dead list will run into the hundreds and very likely into the thousands, the property loss will total millions of dollars.

The flooded district comprises a practical circle with a radius of a mile and a half and in no place is the water less than six feet deep. In Main street, in the downtown section, the water is twenty feet deep.

The horror of the flooded district is heightened by more than a dozen fires which may be seen in the flooded district, but out of reach of the fighters.

Most of the business houses and many all of the residences have no cupsuts.

Unable to Go Home.

Downtown the offices are filled with men, who are unable to get home, and on the upper floors of some of the roofs of the residences are helpless women and children.

Hundreds of houses, substantial buildings in the residence districts, many of them with brick pavements, have been washed away. The number of drowned cannot be estimated until the flood subsides.

Hospital Washed Away.

St. Elizabeth hospital with 600 patients and staff reported to have been washed away.

The buildings were known to be in imminent peril of water and indications are that the report may prove true.

The entire light plants were put out of business early in the day and total darkness, coupled with a torrential downpour, added to the horrors of the night.

Rescues also became an immediate possibility. All of the supply and grocery houses are in the submerged district and at midnight it was said there was not enough bread to last the town another day.

John H. Patterson, president of the National Cash Register company, who headed the relief work in the south city, sent out an appeal for food supplies and for doctors and medicine.

Thousand homeless were housed in the Cash Register buildings.

Many Bodies Found.

There are no boats in Dayton which can breast the current and those on hand have many times gone a way on tempts to reach the business section.

Two Hundred at Peru.

Indianapolis, Ind.—The first report of the loss of life in Peru was contained when Governor Ralston talked over the long distance telephone to Mayor Butler, the executive head of that city. Mr. Butler said 100 coffins, at least, were needed, other bodies had been washed away.

The survivors are badly in need of food and clothing.

$20,000,000 Loss.

The flood, stirs wife and appalling in its limmensity and terrifying in the swiftness in which it came, has been washed away.

The property loss in the Wabash valley is estimated at $20,000,000 in addition to the damage to railroads, which would be difficult to cope with an outbreak. The trip requires twelve days.

Slaughter in Mexico Reported.

El Paso, Texas, March 27.—Wholesale slaughter of prisoners and civilians suspected of sentiments in opposition to the present regime is transpiring along the branch line of the Mexican Central railroad between Jiminez and Parral, both south of Chihuahua City, according to reports of refugees here. State troops and Huerta forces are vieing in the slaughter, say the refugees. The killing began after the insurgent state troops captured Santa Barbara and executed federal prisoners.

Greek King Sworn In.

Athens, March 24.—King Constantine of Greece took the constitutional oath of office in the chamber of deputies at the capital today in the highest details of the state and the entire parliament. The king left for Saloniki last night.

Wrong Man Assassinated.

Peking, March 24.—General Sung, former Chinese minister of education, died in Shanghai as the result of being shot by mistake by an assassin.

Many Cows Killed by Storm.

Lodi, March 26.—Many cattle were killed, barns were demolished and much property loss was caused by Sunday's storm as it passed over the Fox river valley. Several large dairy barns were demolished and 200 cows were killed at Algonquin, Ill.

Shackleton to Enter Antarctic.

London, March 24.—Just before his departure for New York on the steamer Mauretania, Sir Ernest Shackleton announced that he intended to head a scientific expedition to the Antarctic.

HUNDREDS KILLED IN STORM

Large Portion of Omaha Devastated--Entire Central West Suffers--Indiana Hit.

Omaha.—More than 200 persons were killed and 400 were injured in a wind storm that demolished 455 houses, damaged hundreds of other buildings and caused a monetary loss of $5,000,00, according to reports available from the main path of the tornado in and near Omaha.

Count Cost in Dollars.

For the first time since the disastrous tornado of Easter Sunday, the people of Omaha began to count the cost, both in lives and dollars. When a census was made it was apparently more appalling than those who had studied the results were willing to admit.

The destitution was augmented when nearly three inches of snow fell over the stricken district, making entirely uninhabitable the homes of many who had prepared to retain temporary homes in partially destroyed structures. So far as money might relieve, conditions were perfect. Centers came from nearly every section of the country, and were made uncondidionally.

$200,000 for Sufferers.

The city and state have either made or prepared to make appropriations to meet all emergency needs and relief corps are being organized to care for every case resulting in destitution.

In addition to the responses of relief, numerous other institutions have made generous gifts. Bids which are ready bring the total immediately available for relief to nearly $300,000.

Seven of Injured Die.

Seven persons injured in Sunday evening's storm died in the local hospitals. These were Flora Cassell, a nurse at the Methodist hospital, who was caught in the destruction of the student nurses' home; J. G. Hook, whose body was found when the house in which he was boarding, was demolished; Mrs. Mary Hook, his niece boarding; an unknown elderly woman, also in the Methodist hospital; Earl Hook, a nine year old boy, and Mrs. R. R. Vandeven sod baby.

Most of the casualties were in Omaha, which was stricken a second before. Nearby towns in Nebraska also across the Missouri river in Iowa also suffered severely. Wires were snapped off in all directions and it took many hours to get a full report even of the disaster.

All forms of communication were interrupted by the wind and only two or three wires were working condition when daylight relieved a night of high tension, which at times almost became panic. Rumors, some of sensational troops, poured into the city yesterday and a number of fatalities reported from districts, aiding the police to maintain order and relieve such cases of suffering as come to their notice.

Loss Occurs Sectionally.

The greatest loss of life occurred sectionally. Three points in the path of the storm seem to have gathered the prices. These were at Fortieth and Spring streets, where a car was just sought refuge in a garage, at Twenty-fourth and Lake streets, where a movie picture theater was demolished and at Twenty-fourth and Willis avenues where a grocery was wrecked.

In each of these places the fatalities were large.

No like catastrophe ever had visited the city and it was overwhelmed by it. The destruction was great, the situation, however, and measures for relief were taken promptly. Trinity cathedral) was temporarily turned into a relief station. Physicians visited homes that had been destroyed. In many cases administering the last rites to many dying and caring for bodies began the organization of relief committees.

Tornado Is Summarized.

Chicago.—Totals of dead and injured in the tornado and storm are as follows, according to reports just received:

	Dead	Injured
Omaha and suburbs	200	400
Terre Haute, Ind	18	250
Chicago	2	50
Tulan, Neb	16	20
Berlin, Neb	7	17

Weeping Water, Neb	2	2
Neola, Iowa	2	2
Glenwood, Iowa	6	2
Eberle, Iowa	1	6
Malvern, Iowa	1	2
Walton, Ill	1	1
Sterling, Ill	1	1
Traverse City, Mich	1	1
Perth, Ind		1
Total	213	694

By far the greatest damage was done in and near Omaha.

The gale left Omaha only to sweep on to the north, where it left a path of destructive manner. The rage of the elements soon extended in a somewhat lesser degree to points far to the east.

No sooner had the great wind pasted than a second violent gale swept over much of the same territory, but with lessened fury.

What seems to have been a separate storm swept portions of Indiana, doing greatest damage in Terre Haute, Indiana. There nearly a score of persons were slain and hundreds were injured. Other places in Indiana report lesser damage.

Flood swept through several Wisconsin cities, damaging many thousand dollars' worth of goods in basements. Dams were washed out in many places and the released waters swept over the fields.

Millionaires Seem to Meet in Chicago.

In Chicago, all the elements seemed to meet shortly after Easter Sunday had closed. The wind blew a violent gale, snow flew before it in some places, hail crushed windows under its propelling power in other parts of the city, and rain and sleet were dashed by it into the faces of belated pedestrians and those who were driven into the streets by the partial wrecking of their homes.

After the gale had passed, the wind died to a gentle breeze, the sun shone brightly and the warmth of spring pervaded the air.

Like a Separate Storm in Indiana.

Terre Haute, Ind.—Eighteen persons known to have been killed, 250 injured, 1,000 homes destroyed and other property estimated at nearly a million dollars, was the toll of the tornado that devastated Terre Haute and vicinity last evening.

Now the officials in charge of the rescue work say the list of dead will be increased as the searchers dig with hundreds of hills awaiting consideration. In the house nearly 1,200 persons are quartered and in the armories the figure is near the 900 mark.

Workmen's Bill Considered.

Protest against the passage of the workingmen's compensation bill is to be heard this morning at a meeting of the labor committee of the house and senate that night. The chief objection is that the bill does not contain a provision for the use of a commission to settle disputes, but instead, leaves the settlements to the district courts. Representative Ernest Lundeen, of Minneapolis, and Hugh T. Halbert, of Red Lake, argued in favor of the Wisconsin plan. The Wisconsin law provides for a state commission. Senators Rockne and Boyle argued in favor of the present bill, which is a copy of the New Jersey law.

There will be few increases of salary at this session, and those will be limited to the most part to officials, who, in the past, have received additional pay from county funds, or from contingent funds. Instead of payments in this irregular way, laws will be passed increasing the salary in question, but fixing the emolument in the amount heretofore paid. It will be made unlawful hereafter, to pay salaries larger than those fixed by law from contingent or other funds.

St. Paul, March 21.—The governor signed the Cashman tariff measure and then went out for three handsome fountain pens in preparation for signing the reapportionment bill.

In signing the Cashman tariff, the governor has not particularly committed himself as a protectionist. He has regards the measure as a legislative compromise and a step in the right direction. The legislature studied the problem for several years and finally passed it. The governor refused to stand in the way of giving it a fair trial.

Bill Increases Liquor Fee.

The house temperance committee yesterday recommended for indefinite postponement the Moeller bill increasing the serving of liquor to drunken persons of hotels with a capacity of 75 or more furnished rooms. The bill would prohibit all of the drinking at class only.

While a report to this affect will go to the house Monday, its adoption will not be permitted without a fight. Representative Hallam of Minneapolis and other conservative members of the committee made a statement to this effect, and said that a minority report will be forced.

Charges Former Official.

Unlimited authority to state Auditor Pearson, under whom he served as deputy about four years ago, A. L. Thompson of Pillsbury says in several hours of his time yesterday in an endeavor to convince the house committee on accounts and expenditures that the former employee was shirking state funds and other matters entrusted to him.

The state auditing inspection department had its inning in the senate chamber yesterday afternoon when Senator Pillsbury of Cass county called the department to the carpet for its alleged inefficiency. Senator Pillsbury charged that the state grain department was in collusion with the big elevator companies. A general denial to all of the charges of misconduct was entered by representatives of the railroad and warehouse commission, and the grain inspection bureau.

Charges of Misconduct.

Charges of misconduct by Samuel G. Iverson as state auditor were made by A. W. Thompson of Pennington, former deputy under Mr. Iverson, before the house committee on public accounts and expenditures. Mr. Thompson's statement was taken down, and will be investigated. He made inference which will not be received before further inquiry. Mr. Thompson was deputy for four years under Mr. Iverson, but he was not reappointed in 1907, and became a candidate against Mr. Iverson in the convention of 1910. Allegations made by him today included the following:

That the auditor took steps to make the "steel trust" pay royalties on iron ore claimed to have gone into dumps from the stripping of state mines, but dropped the matter when Rudolph Gillis of Duluth withdrew his candidacy for state auditor at the 1910 convention.

That the appraised price of timber offered for sale was left at the official lists, and lumbermen were charged $5 each for such lists prepared by Mrs. Ada J. Elzbrock, Mr. Iverson's sister and confidential stenographer, who fixed the appraised price included.

That Mr. Iverson paid $50 of state money to a Mr. Hall of Minneapolis for writing a letter on state development, and that the person became possessor of $50 worth of stock in Hall's typewriting machine company.

St. Paul, March 26.—Backed by Speaker Henry Rines, a bill proposing a modified referendum on the government for the state of Minnesota was introduced in the legislature house. The bill provides for submission to the people by vote at the next constitutional amendment creating a state executive department to consist of a governor, lieutenant governor, auditor and four commissioners, and provides that the governor and the four commissioners shall make up the state executive council and general supervision of the executive departments of the state.

Only Bill of Kind.

The bill introduced in the joint work of senator Hiram Bronson Greenleaf, W. I. Nolan, the Rines floor leader, and Henry Rines. It is said to be the only bill of its kind ever submitted to the legislature, and the authors of the initiative and referendum law would make a vigorous fight for its passage.

Under the proposed amendment, the terms of the governor and lieutenant governor would be four years, and the term of the four commissioners and the auditor would be four years, the latter two would make the accounting and auditing officer of the state.

House members fought desperately yesterday to save the multiplicity of local boards, bureaus and commissions which the Knoeland public domain bill recommends be cut out. Owing to the recommendations of Governor Eberhart, Senator Smith, concerning all their duties under a single public domain commissioner. In the end the men who had a bill in their pockets scored a partial victory as the bill was referred back to the land committee with instructions which recommended its passage.

The threatened fight for a committee on committees which marked the organization of the present house membership in a bill aimed to do away with when the next legislature convenes. The committee on committees is known as the rules committee, is to be composed of two members from each congressional district, to name standing committees and select employes. The rules committee is to be elected by caucus, each district meeting separately and naming its members. Those behind the bill are Representatives Lundeen, Nicholas, Payke, Kimpel and P. A. Peterson.

The House yesterday morning approved the bill drawn up by the legislative committee of the Civic and Commerce association and introduced by Senator Wilson, giving Minneapolis and Duluth control of their own employes of all city departments under its control. Only amendment offered was Nelson's. The bill will be law as soon as Governor Eberhart affixes his signature.

The house placed a few minor amendments on the bill and then left Senator Wilson will ask the senate to accept these amendments. The bill as done and the bill then he ready for the governor's signature.

DOINGS OF THE SOLONS

Minnesota Legislative Affairs of the Past Week—Law Makers Hard at Work.

St. Paul, March 26.—The advisability of establishing a state board of censorship to pass on moving pictures exhibited in Minnesota was discussed before the senate committee on general legislation last night. Representatives of the motion picture houses protested against the passage of a bill establishing a state board of censorship.

"Full Crew" Fight On.

Senate and house members were fairly swamped yesterday with telegrams and signed petitions protesting against the passage of what is known as the "full crew railroad bill." They came by the hundreds from all ports of the state.

The bill, which has the backing of organized railroad trainmen, makes it compulsory the employment of a crew of not less than five men on a passenger train of six or more cars, and forbids the employment of any of them as express or baggage men. In the case of freight trains of 50 cars or more, the crew must not be less than six.

Sessions Ta Time Limit.

That there will be six weeks more of legislative sessions, which will bring the finish to the full 90 working days permitted by the constitution, seems certain. In the house the leaders have announced that the finish will not come before the lawful limit.

Night sessions will begin in the house tonight. The plan arranged by the leaders yesterday was to meet this morning, adjourn at 12:30 p. m., 1:30 hence adjourned after the regular meetings and then put in the evening cleaning up either general orders or the calendar.

The senate is just as heavily burdened as the house. It recently became more deliberation than its neighbors and bets are plentiful

James Ward Rogers Uncrowned King

The Tragic End of the Famous American Ivory Poacher

by W. Robert Foran

COPYRIGHT BY RIDGWAY CO.

EVERY one will remember the dramatic story, recently given to the world through the daily press, of the death of James Ward Rogers, the American elephant-poacher, in the Congo. The name Rogers probably conveyed nothing to many millions all over the world until the story of his tragic end was published broadcast. Yet no one who have traveled in Stanley's "Darkest Africa"—the territory which witnessed the truly remarkable end of an adventurous career—the details of the dramatic chase through the jungles and its still more dramatic conclusion will not be a mere pipe-dream.

There must be many others in America besides myself who have been through this section of Central Africa and to whom Rogers was known personally. And to us the story brings regrets, for Rogers was a fine type of man, even though his latter days were spent in authority and defiance of lawfully constituted authority.

In order that the causes which led up to the tragedy may be better understood, it is necessary to touch lightly upon history and political facts. Many may recall that the British government leased the strip of the Congo territory known to the Lado Enclave—a long strip stretching along the banks of the Nile from the southernmost extremity of Lake Albert to Kiro, on the edge of Sudan—to the late King Leopold of the Belgians, for the duration of his lifetime. On his death, it passed back into British hands and, incidentally, under the control of the Sudan officials.

Prior to this—that is to say, under Leopold's rule—the Lado Enclave was the happy hunting-ground of a band of brilliant and foreign ivory poachers. The Belgian administration of the Lado was a mere farce. Officials were few and far between and the natives did as they willed, without fear of let or hindrance. It has to be remembered, however, that if any of the poachers were caught red-handed with the poached ivory, they were sent to the Belgian Congo capital, Leopoldsville, on the Congo river, to undergo ten years' hard labor in a chain-gang.

This little pleasantry of punishment was the worse imaginable. They were chained round the neck and fastened to a long string of the worst native malefactors. Their legs were riveted into chains and round their middles ropes. This had chains, supporting the enormous leg-irons. All day these poor wretches worked in the furnaces or in the open, under a blazing sun, goaded on to further labor by the extreme brutalities of their hard-hearted guards.

White man and negro were treated alike. No favors were shown to any of them.

It may be safely stated that the death of Rogers closes the long chapter of lawless elephant poaching in the Congo. For years this Lado Enclave was known as "No Man's Land;" but it is not so now, for the Sudan government assumed control in June, 1910, and set about extirminating the poaching industry.

On my arrival at Mongalla, the southernmost post of the Sudan on the Nile in those days, I had the good fortune to meet my old comrade in arms, Capt. G. V. Fox of the Egyptian army, and discussed at length with him the prospects of routing out the ivory-poachers.

At the time I little thought that, a trifle over two years later, Captain Fox would be the central figure with Rogers in one of the most dramatic and exciting stories of real adventure which has ever come out of the Congo, or, for that matter, Africa. But we who know our Africa have learned to be surprised at nothing.

Part of the remarkable story comes to me direct from my old friend Captain Fox and part from other friends in Africa. Captain Fox's story lacks a good many details, for the modesty of the British soldier is reflected throughout his narrative. There are many points you and I would like to have cleared up, but either Fox's modesty or his sense of what is due to a dying man's last request prevent the elucidation of the blank spaces.

For instance, we would like to know who is the doctor referred to by Rogers and Captain Fox. Maybe we shall never know! Rogers' lips are sealed by death and the lips of Captain Fox are sealed by a dying man's last charge. The "doctor" must go down to posterity as a figure of mystery, unless the Belgians disclose his name. We know that he was the boon companion of Rogers and we have the latter's statement that he was innocent of poaching.

One must sympathize with Rogers, even if one disapproves of his breaches of the law. His is a picturesque figure and he died as, no doubt, he would have wished to have died—with his face to the front and shielding his comrade, the mysterious doctor.

Rogers was an American who, at different times, was a resident of many cities in California. He had spent many years of his life in the most quenchable search after adventure—with a big A—until he found his brother's desire in Central Africa. He joined in the rush to the Klondike in the late nineties and after his return he entirely disappeared until the news came of his death in Africa.

After trying first one thing and then another in Africa, he turned his hand to elephant poaching, and here he found his true element of adventure.

He got the natives of the Lado Enclave under his control so that they did his every bidding and acted as his allies. He established an organized administration over the wild, treeless country, and, among these naked savages, who had hitherto known no master, he virtually became a king, even if he was an unrowned monarch. Time after time he evaded capture by Sudan and Belgian officials. And, finally, we have seen how he eluded a hot pursuit for ever six weeks.

Entering the Lado Enclave with his little companion, he set to work to make the unruly and hitherto uncivilized natives subservient to his will—and even more than that, for he meds them stand-offish. On the approach of government officials the natives would give him ample warning so that he could escape. Then he travelled about the country until he saw a good site for his headquarters, where he could store his ivory, ammunition and supplies.

The next thing to do was to train a band of natives as ivory-poachers.

All now being ready, he proceeded to mark down the good herds of elephants in his vicinity. His native spies were trained to bring him early information of the approach of a good herd. No sooner did he get news of some big tuskers than he set forth through the thorn scrub, under a blazing tropical sun, to track them.

Creeping on all-fours through the bushes and fifteen-foot-high grass, he made his way into the center of the herd and selected his bulls. He would follow them up until he had killed off all the best tuskers in the herd. Then would come the cutting up of the elephants and the bewing out of their giant ivory teeth.

At last the Sudan government determined to stand this brazen lawlessness no longer. A messenger was dispatched to Rogers warning him to come in and surrender, or else, declared the official, he would not be spared.

His answer was typical of the man:

"If you want me, come and get me."

Now Captain Fox, Inspector of the Mongalla province in the Sudan, did want Rogers and, moreover, wanted him badly. He accepted the challenge, after first sending word to Rogers that he proposed to bring him into Mongalla, "dead or alive."

Rogers laughed when he read the message. Back came the answer, on the foot of the same official note: "I am waiting. Come and get me."

Captain Fox set forth from Mongalla in pursuit of this daring outlaw with the meager force of a Sudanese non-commissioned officer and six Sudanese soldiers and a few native carriers and mules for the conveyance of supplies.

Up the banks of the Nile went the little party of soldiers and their white leader and ever in advance of them was the fearless Rogers, laughing in his sleeve and content in the belief that he could outwit the most determined pursuit. But he had misjudged the caliber of the man who had been sent after him.

Day by day the little party kept on down the Nile, up the Nile across the Nile, first in the Congo territory and then in Uganda territory. Doubling and redoubling on their tracks, they never gave up hope.

Something of the spirit which must have possessed both pursuer and pursued can be gleaned from the terms of the final meeting between these two men.

Worn out, wet and hungry, Fox and his party reached a village late one night. They were fearful that the poachers had shot a native for displaying an elephant's tusk. This had happened only that morning, so now they were on the track of Rogers.

Despite their pitiable condition, on learning of his murder Captain Fox and his weary men at once set out in hot pursuit. They traveled all that night and the greater part of the next day. Toward evening they came in sight of an isolated village square, around which were grouped a hundred of the armed native followers of the poacher.

Slowly Captain Fox advanced until he stood in the center of this armed mob.

"Where is the white man, your master?" he asked authoritatively.

The armed natives watched him sullenly, with out vouchsafing any reply. At once what seemed like hours to the captain, one of the natives pointed silently toward a large house in the center of the village.

Fox approached the house indicated, with his rifle cocked and ready for instant use in case of need. He halted a few paces from the house and commanded Rogers to come out and surrender. No reply came to the first command and so he repeated it twice more.

All remained as silent as the grave and Fox began to suspect treachery. But he kept his finger on the door.

Suddenly it opened; and a native servant came out and saluted.

"The commandant wants you to come in," he said, in his native dialect. "He is sick, and can not come out to you."

At first it looked suspicious, but Fox decided to risk any trap. He walked toward the house and left his rifle outside leaning against the wall. Then he called to his soldiers to remain on guard and allow no one to enter the house while he was in it.

Then he passed in through the doorway.

He found himself in a large dark room, lighted by a single candle-lamp. For a moment his eyes failed to see anything, but gradually he became accustomed to the dark light and made out the figure of a man lying in a camp cot beside him sat another white man, who was unknown to Fox. He had heard that there was no other white man with Rogers, whom the natives called "Doctor," but his identity had never been learned by the government.

Surrounding the bed were two armed native followers of Rogers, who eyed the soldier with sullen suspicion.

Fox stood inside the door and looked from one white man to the other.

"Where is Mr. Rogers?" he asked, breaking the strained silence.

"Mr. Rogers has been shot," replied the white man sitting beside the cot, with a growl of anger.

"Yes, and by your men."

The man on the bed spoke thickly and as if in great pain.

"I am sorry, very sorry, indeed, that you have been wounded, Mr. Rogers." Fox walked slowly forward to the bed. "I hope it is not serious, but certainly you are mistaken in thinking my soldiers did it."

"No!" Rogers thundered at him, partly rising in his bed and falling back with a groan. The other white man helped him. "It was your own soldiers you sent here to arrest me," he continued, with bitter hate.

"There were three of my men on ahead of me, it is true," Fox replied, "but I am convinced they would not have shot at you or interfered with you."

"Well, you're a cool one," Rogers admitted grudgingly. "Do you know I have you covered with my Colt?"

"Yes, but you won't dare to shoot," Fox laughed quietly.

"Won't dare! Why not, I should like to know?" Rogers answered back. "I have over a hundred armed men outside and you only have five men with you, so my men tell me."

"Nevertheless, you won't dare shoot me or molest my men. You are under arrest, Mr. Rogers for illicit ivory-poaching, murder, entering a closed district without a permit, and carrying a gun without a license."

"So that is what I am charged with," is it?" Rogers smiled grimly. "Have you no other charges to prefer?"

"You're wounded now. Let all that rest until you are better."

"No, I'm a dying man, I guess. Do you know you're in the Belgian territory, that you are surrounded by my men, and that you stand more chance of arrest than I do?"

"You are mistaken. I am not in Belgian territory and we need not discuss the chances of my arrest."

Captain Fox deemed it wise not to excite the men any more and silently withdrew from the room. Once outside, he set to work to disarm the followers of the dying Rogers. This was soon accomplished, for they were cowed, now that their leader was helpless.

In the middle of the night a native servant came to Captain Fox to say that Rogers was dying, and that he wished to speak to the officer. The soldier did not wait but came to see the house again. But Captain Fox was not to be deterred.

As he entered the house, Rogers turned to his white companion, saying:

"Doctor, I wish you to hear and be a witness to what I am going to say to Captain Fox. I surrender myself voluntarily to the Sudan government. I want you to tell him that I have come into the trouble over this affair, captain. I believe I am a dying man, so that I am not going to do about it. This was my show and all my work. They are not blameless."

On the following afternoon the three soldiers who had been sent on ahead arrived at the village and gave Captain Fox an account of their experiences.

They stated that on arriving in the poacher's stronghold Rogers ordered them to give up their arms. His white companion, the doctor, opened fire with it and a revolver. His companion, the doctor, also fired on the soldiers with a Winchester. Others of Rogers' men then opened fire and with arrows. Had it not been almost dark, the soldiers would have been killed and, as it was, they all had narrow escapes. all of them being hit.

In the fighting, Rogers was struck by a soldier's bullet, which lodged near the hip, but he walked to his house and ordered his men to fire.

By this time Captain Fox was satisfied that he was on Belgian territory and wrote to the Belgian commandant to explain the occurrence. Two days later the Belgian officer arrived on the scene with a large armed force.

The day after the arrival of the Belgians, Rogers was hideously dying, and sent for Fox. He was conscious to the end, and described his symptoms.

"Say, captain, you are a big fellow and strong. Lift me up once more—for the last time." he muttered. "I will die at sundown tomorrow. I'm still pretty heavy, ain't it?"

Fox leaned over him and gently raised him on the bed, with his arms under the dying man's shoulders.

"I'm sorry, Rogers," he said. "But you brought this on yourself."

"I know, old man. You're all right. I would rather have surrendered to you then any one. Good-bye, Doc. Good-by, captain. Remember, the doctor is innocent. Good-by."

His head dropped back as his spirit went in to render its last account to his Maker. Gently Fox laid the body of the poacher on the bed and then turned about to escape once more from the house who was deeply unstrung by his friend's death.

And so this man died, far away from his friends and country. Full of courage and of a big heart, his fate was worthy of a better cause. So did the curtain fall upon the strange, tragic tragedy in the history of the Congo elephant-poachers.

HABAKKUK, THE NEGLECTED.

Short Chapter of the Bible That Is Little Read.

One of the disappointed statesmen of the country on election night found solace in reading Habakkuk, which of the minor prophets, as found in the old testament, is the least in many persons' even such as are fairly familiar with the Bible. Frequently people ask for passages of the prophets, says the Philadelphia Inquirer. It is seldom one hears texts from such unwonted source.

As a fact, nothing is known whatever of Habakkuk unless he be identified with one of the nasis name who is mentioned in the apocryphal works as having ministered to Daniel in the lion's den. The name is not found elsewhere in the canon assumed for literary purposes, as was not uncommon in those days.

The gist of the first two chapters of the book is the grief of the prophet over the approaching captivity of the Jews. Then comes the musical directions, which some persons think was written by another of the same name or title. Perhaps not many persons know that in this book is found the familiar quotation: "But the Lord is in his holy temple; let all the earth keep silence before him."

Cause and Effect.

"What's the matter—didn't you have a good breakfast?"

Mystic Crystal Sphere Is Morgan's Gift to Museum.

Water-Pure Globe Venerated for Centuries in the Orient Now Where Visitors Gaze Into Its Liquid Depths.

New York.—The Museum of Natural History recently has acquired a "mystic crystal sphere"—a silver-mounted globe of quartz, water-pure and of wonderful symmetry. This curious bauble for centuries has been regarded with veneration and even fear by people of the far east. Visions, hallucinations of hallucination lurk within its liquid depths, and this has been substituted by wizard and seer with an little profit in bygone days.

The crystal is the gift of J. Pierpont Morgan. Nearly five inches in diameter, it is absolutely devoid of flaw, cloud, stain or irregularity, and even the most cynical disbeliever in matters mystical cannot but admit a fascination, a subtle sense of the occult, when looking into its clear depths.

Where did it come from? What is its history? These are questions that must remain unanswered. About its glassy surface hangs strange delusions of prophecy and clairvoyance—tales of the mystic sphere's influence in ancient always scoffed at by the most scornful of scientific writers.

Fabulous are the weird stores told of the effect it has upon the lives of men and women. There was the young girl of San Saturo, who eloped with her sister's husband. She took a famous crystal—a family heirloom with her—and the morning after the escapade she was found lifeless on a couch with the crystal broken in a thousand pieces on the floor.

Probably the most expert crystal fortune-teller in the world at present is a thousand years ago! They had no laboratories, working with a rude globular form by chipping with small hammers, were afterward ground down to an even surface with emery powder or sawdust. The transformation polish was imparted by rubbing the surface with bamboo and with the ashes which had previously been dipped in a rough kind of cloth.

The largest and most perfect sphere known is kept in the Green Vault at Dresden. It weighs fifteen pounds and the seven inches in diameter.

The ashes which polish the spheres arises from the cerity of the quarts

The effect of the crystal upon the human mind is known to be of a remarkable character. Palm Beach, Fla.—Peter Rogers had a hand and hand fight with a porpoise while bathing, and was severely injured by its fins before he was released.

Woman Veteran in Want

"Mustered Out" of New York Municipal Service; Was Wounded In Battle.

New York.—Kady Brownell, the only woman veteran of the civil war, has been mustered out of the civil service, under which she had served the city for many years.

She and her husband, Robert B. Brownell, have been living in the basement mansion, corner of One Hundred and Sixtieth street and Edgecomb avenue, where they have been acting as caretakers. Commissioner Stover of the parks department has made arrange with the Grand Army of the Republic, of which both Mr. and Mrs. Brownell are members, to take care of them in the institution for the vest of their lives. The difficulty is that the application has not had to consider similar cases.

Mrs. Brownell's military career may be said to have begun with the battle on the battlefield, when her father, Colonel George South-well was stationed in Rhode Island. Her mother died a few days later, but the child was allowed to go home with her father.

At the time he was ordered back to Africa and the little girl came to the United States with another friend of the family, Miss Almeda Holmes. While living in Central Falls, R. I., she met and was married to Mr. Brownell, she being then barely 18 years old. Three days after her marriage the war broke out and her husband, who was one of the charter members of the Mechanics' Rifles of Providence, was summoned to go to the front.

Both Mrs. Brownell and her husband were wounded during the war, the latter seriously. In 1884 congress passed an act granting her a special pension. Since 1903 she has been employed by the New York Department of Parks.

ESCAPE RENT DAY 7 YEARS

Heirs of Late Landlord Found, New York Tenants Have Homes Will Be Sold.

New York.—Rent days are due for the families who for more than seven years since the death of Frederick S. Copley on December 9, 1905, have been occupying five of Copley's dwellings in South Prince street, Flushing. Copley, a Englishman, died on Staten island, leaving an will.

After a world-wide search, Nelson Tunnicliffe, an attorney of this city, found the heirs in England, Africa and Australia. They have authorized the sale of the property.

BOYS BARRED AS ESCORTS

School Authorities Near Kiev Are Somewhat Strict in Matter—Teachers Also Ill.

Vienna, Austria.—The relent discussion and general opposition in Austria to coeducation in the schools and colleges of the dual monarchy has brought comparison to the working of this system of instruction in Russia.

Kherol, a town near Kiev, carries the banner for severe ordinances. Here, as in many provincial towns, boy pupils have been forbidden to go walking with the girl students in the streets, but the Kherol board of education followed this ordinance with an order prohibiting the teacher also to be seen on the streets in company with the woman, on the ground that they should furnish an example of proper conduct to their pupils. At a high school party held in Kherol during the holidays the school authorities at midnight segregated the boy pupils in a locked room, dismissed the girls unescorted, and released the young men only when time enough had elapsed for the young women to reach their homes.

DREAMS HE'S ON VOLCANO

Man Uses Warmer in Bed and the Illusion Is Shattered on Arrival of Firemen.

Chicago.—All his life J. B. Greiner, 611 Lake avenue, Wilmette, has been troubled with cold feet. Recently he purchased an electric pad foot warmer. One night recently was the first time he had occasion to use it. Wrapping it carefully around his frigid feet, Greiner drifted allwhile pleasant dreams.

Warmth suffused his whole system. He was in a bathing suit, dabbling in the tropical waters of the gulf. His walked barefoot on warm, white sand. He was in warm water far out into the gulf in a they speak for distance. It was an island, the peak of a volcano.

The lava was warm and soothing to his former chilled feet. He sat on the edge of the crater and dangled his feet in the soothing water within.

"Wonderful!" he murmured.

A terrific shriek arose in the night and he was reverberated. Flash! Just like that disappeared the warm vision. But some of it was real. Grimly real. There was fire and smoke.

Outside a clanging announced a fire department answering a call. Scorched feet within told Cromier that heat somewhere was present. He was the oldest volunteer fireman of the Wilmette department and last night was the

Two minutes later that part of the bed and house that had caught fire from the foot warmer had been saved from further ruin, and Greiner soothed his burns with oil.

"I could feel again," he mused disconsolately; "I might have known that dream of warmth was too good to be true."

Limit Is Placed on Meals

Club of Women of Newport Organized In Which Cost of Refreshments Must Not Exceed "Two Bits."

Newport, R. I.—Twenty-five cents is the price Newport society people now pay for their dinners. A club, "The Limit," has been formed. It is a dining club only, the "limit" being a quarter as the price of a meal.

When members of the club are entertained at a luncheon or dinner the expense account of the hostess is read to show the cost of everything served has been within the 25-cent limit.

There was much discussion when the club was formed as to the proper sum to spend and really make it a "limit," and it was decided that 25 cents should be the limit spent for each of the members.

Mrs. Edward Stanley Kellogg was the hostess last night. Other members are Mrs. Walter Calos Cabell, Mrs. George W. Williams, Mrs. W. S. Slaw, Mrs. Edward Shotwell, Mrs. Ernest Howe, Miss C. Olden Jones and Mrs. William Satterlee Ryce.

So keen is the competition among the members that the prospective entertainers consult with their grocers to get prices of fancy morsels. All the delicacies are tried out a month or two years since to arrange various combinations that will provide alluring menus within the 25-cent, limit.

WHERE HORSES HOLD OWN

Notwithstanding Immense Growth of Automobile Industry, Horse Is Not on Decline.

It is curious to observe that with all the immense growth of the automobile industry, the horse is not on the decline. Uncle Sam's latest count shows that there are 20,500,000 horses within the confines of this republic. Where are they?

In rural places and on the farms the horse continues to keep in the front rank of all power producers. Farmers employ more than they used to do to cultivate the same number of acres. On the farm the horse has supplanted man labor to a considerable degree. Improved machinery of every kind has greatly lessened the number of men required to produce a given amount of farm produce, but horses are required to draw this machinery. And that is the real why and wherefore of the growing number of horses. They are decreasing in the cities and increasing on the farms. And the price? Well, if you don't believe that is also going up go out and try to buy a good team of horses.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

You may not like the spring styles, but what you think about them won't have much effect.

Now that spring is here, the weather man might turn his attention to guessing on who may be the next president of Mexico.

This is the season of the year when a man misses the shiners a dog has to a place where he will not be reminded of his presence and hopes that he won't be reminded by the neighbor to whom it may be offensive.

Even the tariff-for-revenue-only Democrats will have considerable difficulty in reviling the tariff "done to death". Every concession will be obtained with proposed reductions and most everything except his home products.

You remember when alone on the cold shiver evenings with your beautiful wood stalactite of the good old days and made. Well—the time for arches is almost at hand and the little heart or a lazy lack never won a battle with words.

Frank Ivy don't want to be Commissioner of Indian Affairs and they are trying to find some other job for him. He cannot be blamed for desiring not to be saved up with rotten conditions that have grown out of the disposal of Indian lands.

There won't be so many "hung" jurors in the state of Minnesota in the future. A new law provides that in civil actions the jury may after deliberating two hours and failing to agree, return a verdict to which ten of the twelve jurymen have assented.

So long as the congressman is expected to get public building appropriations for his district and is expected to see that every public house industries are hit by tariff legislation, it is but an act of tariff revision "downward" as it seems.

The statement that the death of J. Pierpont Morgan on Monday can be attributed to the strain of money by his appearances before the "money trust" committee sounds like such mental stuff. If it is not true it amounts to a slander or charge against the dead money king.

John Burke, the former North Dakota governor, has taken the oath of office as treasurer of the United States and has begun the task of counting $1,500,000,000 in it. Burke who is known to be very conscientious in a public official, looked upon the job as a pleasant one, consequently he has hopes he may live long enough to help in it. It would take one man 300 years to count the money in the treasury.

Last spring the Gazette adopted as its editorial spring poem the following from the pen of William Allen White, editor of the Emporia Gazette:

Spring! Spring!
You're a lusty good thing!

This is so wholly satisfying that all other "publishers" are given slight editorial consideration. In these few words are "boiled down" all the conditions that will up, or await up and demand expression.

There are exceptions to all rules and here is an example. The Tennessee correspondent "got by" the editorial office with a "spring poem." This may be due to the kindly feeling for the people who help gather news for the paper, or the reason may be a purely sentimental one. At the rate being solved, it might be said, that the days are numbered for the pension of the young man (or young woman) of tender years might be stratified.

The position of the "bull moose" on the question of party responsibility should be interesting for they are neither in nor out with the hope of getting in. Either Stevens of the Warren Bulletin, who is a shouted loud and long for "Teddy", or Ed Lee, formerly of Fosston, who is now a Democrat, have many things in common. These are famous things in politics. There are newspaper managers that can not see any partisanship in Republican newspapers who have been in office for from four to twenty-five years and their utmost to have onto their jobs under a Democratic administration, but pipe about "spoilsmen" and the "people spoiled" every time an old fashioned Jacksonian Democrat tries to pry loose one of these hidden-for-life politician parthumakers and get his job for himself. It was the spoils system, and not the civil service, that gave every poet master now in office his job and no Republican should squeal and yell "Spoilsman!" every time a Democrat seeks an office. The Republicans have had a long unInterrupted feast and should be full enough by this time to retire gracefully and let the other fellow change from husks to a more substantial provender. If they just hogs, they will quit their squealing."

CO-AOJUTOR'S REMARKS.

While the lamb has been designated to symbolize warm weather in March, we notice that the prophet who framed up the deal had the good sense to select an animal with a good coat of wool on its back, just the same.—Walker Pilot.

A great many people have the impression that there is a great wave of crime sweeping over the country at the present time. This is not true. Crime is probably not as prevalent as it has been in preceding years but the impression is gained by the publicity given to the few remaining in the papers of those cities. Briefly it is based on the fact that the three largest cut counties of the state would pay about 60 per cent of the fund, which in no case would more than 2 per cent be expended by any one of these counties each year. Under those conditions there is argued that the fund should be used to build trunk lines connecting either to the two cities or Duluth so that more direct benefits could be derived from such expenditures. Other arguments, such as providing a "pork barrel" to be expended by incompetent boards, etc. are given, but the one first mentioned furnishes the principle objection.

This would be a good argument against it if it did not savor so strongly of selfishness. That being the case it does not furnish sufficient grounds sufficient to accomplish defeat of this bill. It should be borne in mind that for years the state at large has been contributing largely to the up institutions from which the twin cities, the state at large has largely contributed largely to their prosperity and in the proof the fact that two such cities are located within its borders.—Bemidji Daily Review.

"Young man, when you buy a buggy, be sure it's a Studebaker"

Sound advice from the man who has been driving one for twenty years.

When you buy a Studebaker buggy you are buying all the skill, experience and science in buggy building that long years of practice can produce. You are protecting yourself against the mistakes of younger builders.

You will always be proud of the Studebaker nameplate, for there isn't a buggy on the road that is its equal for style, luxury and good looks.

Flexible bent-reach gear, graceful lines, solid corner, plugless body, double-ironed shafts, are a few of the special Studebaker features.

Northwestern King, V. H. Nesbit Fisher.

During the winter of 1912-13 the following pure bred hogs have been sold to northwestern Minnesota farmers:

Pure bred Duroc Jerseys, 11 boars and 8 sows; improved Yorkshires, 4 boars and 4 sows. We have 8 brood sows at present which is all we have room for in our building.

Horses. One team of pure bred Percheron brood mares has been secured for breeding purposes.

Of these one mare is a Percheron of excellent type. Next season a Percheron stallion will in a.r. probability be kept at the station for breeding purposes. It is planned to breed up a good strong type of draft horses.

Sheep. The flock of breeding ewes numbers about forty, four of which are pure bred Shropshires, bred to lams in May. The Station ram is a pure bred Shropshire. The sheep project is proving very profitable and successful. Lsch of space prevents a fuller description of the feeding, care and management of the station animals. Further experimental work of an extended nature is planned in connection with these projects in the future.

Future Plans and Needs. The future plans of this department are to continue grading and breeding up the cattle, sheep, and horses and to increase as rapidly as possible the numbers of pure bred animals. Larger and larger numbers of pure bred and high grade animals are being distributed each year. The beef project is as yet in an undeveloped state. It will receive our especial attention this coming year or as soon as suitable room can be provided. At the present time the hog barn is totally inadequate for the work along that line that should be done.

The demand for good dairy and beef stock, horses, sheep, and hogs has never been greater than at the present time. This department is assisting in every way the introduction of good stock into northwestern Minnesota.

Another matter that is receiving attention is our tree and shrub planting work. Several communities are seriously considering forming tree organizations. As well as co-operation in the purchase of pure bred sires.

POULTRY

The poultry department was established about three years ago, commencing in a small way with about fifty laying hens. From time to time the department has been increased in size until at the present time it will accommodate nearly five hundred laying hens. In connection there are facilities for hatching and rearing two thousand chicks each season.

Experimental work has been carried on for the last eight years under considerable difficulties, due largely to the unsanitary conditions of the buildings and yards. Lack of dimenage was the principal cause, and since the plant has been moved to higher ground, matters have changed for the better and the last two years have wrought great improvement in the general health of the stock.

Moisture in Poultry Houses. Experiments have been conducted to determine how to keep the poultry house at excessive moisture in cold weather, and a straw loft principle has been proved a success. This house is constructed with a gable roof which affords ample room for plenty of straw, supported by slats or poles from two to six inches apart. A ventilator opening immediately into the loft causes the air in the pen below to circulate slowly enough to take away the absorbing all the moisture that would otherwise fall to the floor. This style of house has given excellent satisfaction, both for us and a number of farmers, and has proved the value of the moisture question which has so long engaged the attention of the poultry men of the Northwest.

Egg Packing. After five or six years experience, we have found the best results in preserving eggs can be obtained from the use of a one to ten solution of water glass. Eggs are packed in this solution as fast as they solicite. This solution gave better results than all other methods and powder solutions. Other methods tried were packing in oats, packing in paper and placing in a cool cellar, packing in peat, and the use of lime solution.

Poultry Feeding. Wet and dry mash feeding for laying hens has been tried, with the result that dry mash feeding has shown a slight advantage.

Constitutional Vigor of Fowls. At the present time an experiment in this department is being conducted with lots of strong and weak constitutions.

Fattening Experiments. Experiments of different kinds have been conducted with little chicks, also with batches and brooding. Fattening experiments have been very successful in that they have proved that a profit of the poultry business is profitable if properly conducted.

Our results show that the Plymouth Rock will gain from one to two pounds of flesh in three weeks while the Leghorn will only gain from one and one-fourth pounds in the same length of time. It takes three pounds of grain required to produce a pound of flesh in the Rocks while it takes but two pounds in the Leghorn to produce a pound of flesh in the Leghorn.

Trap-Nesting. Trap nesting with a view to establishing a laying strain of hens has been carried on for five years, at the present time there being several hundred eggs sets in the Rock. One Leghorn has made a record of two hundred and twenty-four eggs in twelve months. Another Rock has laid two hundred and twenty-two eggs during her first twelve months of laying. The contest will finally be fought out during the three months, making a total of two hundred and twenty-five eggs in that time. Nine birds from these high record hens are used in the general flock, which has reached the average of nearly one hundred and thirty eggs per hen, or about sixty eggs per hen better than the average hen of the United States.

Distribution of Breeding Stock. The demand for station breeding stock is increasing each year. The past year this department has been unable to meet all the demands made upon it. Very few farmers have come in for other than Barred Rocks and White Leghorns. These two breeds represent the two types of poultry suitable for this northwest country. The general purpose (Barred Rock) and egg type (Leghorns) are both profitable when handled intelligently.

Future Plans and Needs. Further experimental work is needed along the lines of ventilation in poultry houses. The former needs a poultry house that is almost automatic in its operation. As he has very little time to look after his fowls more than three times a day and often he finds it impossible to attend to them more than once each day. At present we have no satisfactory system of ventilation which can be trusted to do the work properly and without much attention.

Farmers' Poultry Houses. The most economical style of poultry houses to build in the northwest is an important problem which should be solved. In recent years we have received many inquiries as to the usefulness of concrete in poultry house construction. These inquiries came chiefly from districts where lumber is high and where concrete can be most economically used. We believe that some most valuable information could be given out in a very short time if the poultry department were equipped for this work. The expense would not be great. These and other lines of work will be continued in the future.

HORTICULTURE AND FORESTRY

The experimental work of this Department has, in the past, been conducted along four general lines: (1) fruit growing, including the growing and testing of small fruits; (2) gardening, including variety tests of vegetables for adaptability to this region; (3) potatoes, especial emphasis being placed on potato spraying, breeding, and variety testing for the heavier types of soils; and (4) windbreaks, especial emphasis being called upon windbreak planting, care and management, and campus tree planting.

FRUIT GROWING.

Varieties of tree fruits adapted to this region have been planted in the experimental orchard. The first planting consisting of 100 trees, was made in the spring of 1904, and additional planting of 125 trees during the season of 1912. The tree fruits planted include the apple, crab, plum and cherry.

Apples. From among the hardier varieties of apples have been planted: Hibernal, Duchess, Patten's Greening, Oaloben, Wealthy. However, as experimental planting of some of the less hardy sorts has also been made. The following sixty varieties as the Delicious, King David, and Lowland Raspberry. Six varieties of crab apple have been planted, namely Florence, Whitney Seedling, Transcendent, Sweet Russet, Early Strawberry and Virginia. The Virginia crab and Hibernal apple are to be used in the breeding work we are working.

Plums. The varieties of plums under test are De Soto, Wyant, Forest Garden, Surprise, and Compass Cherry. The Compass Cherry has been fruiting for the last two seasons. Some promising wild plums that we have planted as fillers between the trees, and in the windbreak, will be budded with the best cultivated varieties of cherries, the Homer and Wragg, are being tested.

Most of the orchard is given clean cultivation. The tender sorts are intercropped with vegetables and strawberries. Cover crops are sown each fall to catch th snow and give good protection to the trees. Buckwheat, field peas, and oats are used.

The orchard trees have been making satisfactory growth and have proved not be expected yet for at least two years.

Small Fruits. Some progress has been made along the line of small fruits. Some progress has been made along the line of small fruits and small fruits. A hundred grapevines were set in the spring of 1912, Beta and Beta seedlings being used exclusively. The following standard varieties of strawberries have been planted: Senator Dunlap, Sample, Warfield, Excelsior, Bederwood, Brandywine and Stevens. Owing to the dry weather at planting time only a fair stand resulted, the Rockhill Everbearer being a complete failure.

Bush Fruits. Plantings have been made of practically all classes of bush fruits, the varieties of each class

"Do You Think They'll Ever Find Him?"

SYNOPSIS.

Bill Cannon, the bonanza king, and his daughter, Rose, who had passed up Mrs. Kearney's list of eligibles, are guests at Governor Jay Talbot's party at Antelope. Dominick Ryan calls on his mother to beg a ball invitation for his wife, and is refused. The determined old lady refuses to receive Dominick's wife, whom she says looks bad and has dragged into a row there with Hercules Iverson, a stenographer, several years his senior. John Spindler, the money, they have financial controls. Rose, who has refused many offers, tells her daughter she expects to be married.

CHAPTER IV.—Continued.

"And the other one," went on Cora, her eyes riveted on the hair-dressing, her subconscious mind making notes of the disposition of every coil, "is somewhere J. D. Buford. And I'd like you to guess what he is! An actor, a stage player. He's been playing all up the state from Los Angeles and was going down to Sacramento to keep an engagement there. It just tickles me to death to have so exciting in the house. I ain't never seen one close to before."

The lad hair-pin was adjusted and Miss Cannon studied the effect with a hand-glass.

"An actor," she commented, removing a smoothing palm up the back of her head, "that's just what he looked like, now I think of it. Perhaps he'll act for us. I think it's going to be a lote of fun being snowed up at Antelope."

The sound of a voice crying "Cora" here rose from the hallway and the young woman, with a final self-satisfied exertion of movement, as of one who obeys a vulgar summons at her own elegant leisure, rose and departed, apologizing for having to go so soon. A few minutes later, the hour of supper being at hand, Rose followed her.

She was descending the stairs when a commotion from below, a sound of voices, loud, argumentative, rising and falling in excited chorus, hurried her steps. The lower hall, lit with lamps and the glow of its stove, heated to a translucent red, was full of men. A current of cold could be felt in the hot atmosphere and fresh snow was melting on the floor. Standing by the stove was a man who had evidently just entered. Hinges of white lay caught in the folds of his garments; a settler bear was on his head. He held his hands out to the heat and as Rose reached the foot of the stairs she heard him say:

"Well, I tell you that any man that started to walk up here from Rocky Bar this afternoon must have been plumb crazy. Why, John L. Sullivan couldn't do it to such a storm."

To which the weather-beaten voice of Willoughby scawered:

"But according to the message he started at two and the storm was hardly falling then. He must have got a good way, past the Silver Crescent, when the storm caught him."

A bustle of voices broke out here, and, seeing her father on the edge of the crowd, Rose went to him and plucked at his sleeve unnoticed.

"What's happened? What's going on?"

He took his cigar out of his mouth and turned toward her, speaking low and keeping his eyes on the men by the stove.

"The telegraph operator has just had a message sent from Rocky Bar that a man started from there this afternoon to walk up here. They don't think he could make it and are afraid he's lost somewhere. Perley and some of the boys are going on to look for him."

"What a dreadful thing! In such a storm! Do you think they'll ever find him?"

He shrugged, and replaced his cigar in his mouth.

"Oh, I guess so. If he was strong enough to get on near here they ought to. But it's just what the operator says. The feller must have been plumb crazy to attempt such a thing. Looks as if he were a stranger in the country."

"It's a sort of quiet, respectable way of committing suicide," said the voice of the actor behind them.

Rose looked over her shoulder and saw his thin, large-featured face, no longer stupid and reddened with cold, but wrestled in an obsequious and friendly smile which furrowed it with deep lines. Her father answered him and she turned away, being more interested in the preparations for the search party. As she watched these she could hear the desultory conversation behind her, the actor's comments addressed with an ease, a confidence elaborate politeness which, contrasted with her father's gruff brevity, made her unwillingly to listen.

Supper was an enlisted meal that evening. The suddenly tragic interest that had developed drew the little group of strangers together with a closer strands of a common sympathy. The Judge and the actor moved their seats to the Cannon table. Cora was sent to request the doctor—a young man fresh from his graduation in San Francisco who took his meals at the bachelors' table—to join them and ask the weight of medical opinion to their surmises as to the traveler's chances of survival. Then the doctor thought, depended as much upon the man's age and physical condition, it upon the search party's success in finding him.

After supper they retired to the parlor, piled the fire high and sat around before it, the smoke of cigars and cigarettes lying about their heads in a blue haze. It was but natural that the conversation should turn on stories of the great storms of the past. Rose had heard many such before, but to-night, with the added interest of attention, to tales of the emigrants lost in the passes of the Sierra, of pioneer mining-camps relieved by acute trains which broke through the blockade at the minute key dying in their huts, of men risking their lives to carry succor to the snowbound in their passage from camp to camp, to just such a night as this.

The clock hand passed ten, and the periods of silence that at intervals had come on the hearth-rug, their notes and more frequent, and finally merged into a silence of tiredness that yawned, listening to the storm.

It was nearly eleven, and for fifteen minutes no one had spoken a word. Two of the dogs had come to lie on the warmth on the hearth-rug, their noses on their paws, their eyes fixed bright-ly and unblinkingly on the fire. In the midst of the motionless semicircle each of them suddenly raised its head, its ears pricked. With its muscle electrified, its eyes full of awakened intelligence, it gave a low, un-yay whimper. Almost on this seemingly the men started and drew themselves up, exclaiming, "Listen!" The sound of sleigh bells, faint as a noise in a dream, came through the night.

In a moment the lower floor was shaken with movement and noise. The bar emptied and on to the end of the hall doors were thrown wide. The sleigh had been close to the hotel before its bells were heard, and almost immediately its shape emerged from the swirling whiteness and drew up at the steps. Rose, standing back in the parlor doorway, heard a clamour of voices, a rising surge of sound from which no intelligible sentence detached itself, and a thumping and stamping of feet as the searchers staggered in with all set revered. The crowd separated before them and they entered slowly, four men carrying a fifth, their bodies incrusted with snow, the man they bore an unseen shape covered with whitened rags from which an arm hung, a limp hand touching the floor. Questions and answers, now clear and sharp, followed them, like notes upon the text of the inert form.

"Where'd you get him?"

"About five miles below on the mels road. One of the horses almost stepped on him. He was right in the path, but he was all sprinkled over with snow."

"He's not dead, is he?"

"Pretty near, I guess. We've pumped whiskey into him, but he ain't shown a sign of life."

"Who is he?"

"Search me. I ain't seen him myself yet. Just as we got him the lantern went out."

There was a sofa in the hall and they laid their burden there, the crowd edging in on them, horrified, interested, haggrity peering. Rose could see their bent, expressive backs and the craning necks of their necks. Then a sharp order from the doctor drove them back, theaplah, tramping on one another's toes, bunched against the wall and still avidly staring. As their make broke, the young girl had a sudden, vivid glimpse of the man, his head and part of his chest uncovered. Her heart gave a leap of pity and she made a movement from the doorway, then stopped. The loft traveler, that an hour before had almost assumed the features of a friend, was a complete stranger that she had never seen before.

He looked like a dead men. His face, the chin up, the lips parted under the fringe of a brown mustache, was e marble white, and showed e gray shadow in the cheek. The hair on his forehead, thewed by the heat, was lying in damp half-curled semicircles, dark against the pallid skin. There was a ring on the hend that still hung limp on the floor. The doctor, muttering to himself, pulled open the shirt and was feeling the heart, when Perley, who had flown into the har for more whisky, emerged, a glass in his hand. As his eye fell upon the man, he stopped, stared, and then exclaimed in loud-voiced amaze:

"My God—why, it's Dominick Ryan! Look here, Governor"—to Cannon, who was standing by his daughter in the parlor doorway, "come and see for yourself. I tell you it ain't young Ryan a Dutchman!"

Cannon pushed between the-intervening men and bent over the prostrate figure.

"That's who it is," he said slowly and unemotionally. "It's Dominick Ryan, all right. Well, by George!" and he turned and looked at the amazed bankeeper, "that's the queerest thing I ever saw. What's brought him here, Perley?"

Perley, his glass snatched from him by the doctor who seemed entirely indifferent to recognition of his patient, shrugged helplessly.

"Blest if I know," he said, staring aimlessly about him. "He was here last summer fishing. But he's never been hunting now. God, ain't it a good thing that operator at Rocky Bar had the sense to telephone up!"

CHAPTER V.

Nurse and Patient.

When Dominick returned to consciousness he lay for a space looking at the ceiling in front of him. Then he moved his head and let his eyes sweep the room. They were also walls of white and plaster, naked of all adornment. The room was long, narrow, and he was in one of them in a soft yet clear wash of yellow, so clear that he could see the plaster in the ceiling.

There were few pieces of furniture in the room, and all new to him. A chest of the old-fashioned marble-topped kind stood against the wall near him. The lamp that cast the yellow light was on this bureau; its globe, fresh from the graduation in San Francisco who took his meals at the bachelors' table—to join them and add the weight of medical opinion to their surmises as to the traveler's chances of survival. Then the doctor thought, depended as much upon the man's age and physical condition, it upon the search party's success in finding him.

After supper they retired to the parlor, piled the fire high and sat around before it, the smoke of cigars and cigarettes lying about their heads in a blue haze. The sleigh had been close to the hotel before its bells were heard, and almost immediately its shape emerged from the swirling whiteness and drew up at the steps. Rose, standing back in the parlor doorway, heard a clamour of voices, a rising surge of sound from which no intelligible sentence detached itself, and a thumping and stamping of feet as the searchers staggered in with all set revered. The crowd separated before them and

"Oh, yes," he answered with an air of weary recollection, "I was going to walk there from Rocky Bar, but the snow came down too hard, and the wind—you could hardly stand against it! It was a terrible pull. Perley's Hotel at Antelope. Of course, I know all about it. I was here last summer for two weeks fishing."

She stretched out her hand for a glass, across top of the table, and sat seated. He followed the movement with a mute flutty.

"This is your medicine," she said, taking the look of the glass. "I'll warn to take it at five but I didn't like to wake you."

She dipped a spoon into the glass and held it out to him. But the young man felt low ill in bother with eyes closing and, as the spoon touched his lips, he gave his head a slight jerk and the liquid was spilt on the counterpane. She looked at it for a rueful moment, then said, as if in gathering determination.

"But you must take it. I think perhaps I gave it wrong. I ought to have lifted you up. It's awful hot work and before he could answer she slipped her arm under his head and raised it, with one hand put behind the rim of the glass against his lips. He swallowed a mouthful and felt the arm sliding from behind his head. He had a hazy consciousness that a pillow came from her dress, and for the first time he wondered who she was. Wondering, his eyes must have followed her hand putting back the glass, and watched it, white in the gloom of lamplight, carefully replacing the book. Then she turned toward him with the same slight, soft smile.

"Who are you?" he said, keeping his bollwer on a level key.

"I'm Rose Cannon," she answered. "Rose Cannon from San Francisco."

"Oh, yes," with a movement of comprehension, the name striking a chord of memory. "Rose Cannon from San Francisco, daughter of Bill Cannon. Of course I know."

He turned his head away from her and said dryly and unconcernedly:

"I thought it was some one else."

She bent down and said, speaking slowly and distinctly as though to a child:

"The storm hee broken the wires, but as soon as they are up, peps will send word to your people that you're safe. I don't suppose you want me to send a telegram of weariness.

"That doesn't matter," he said. "Don't bother about it. Let her alone."

Again there was one of those pauses which seemed to time to be long. He gave a sigh and moved restlessly, and she said:

"Are your feet very painful?"

"Yes, very much," he answered. "What's the matter with them?"

"They were frostbitten, one partly frozen."

"Oh—" he did not seem profoundly interested. And as if the answer some one else's fee, only they hurt much. Then he turned his head, closed his eyes again, and said:

"Thank you very much," he added. "I'll be all right now, nurse."

He felt very tired and heard, as in a dream, that she left her chair and she moved again. She said something about his not talking, and the dark, enveloping sense of stupor from which he had come to life began to close in.

Some time later on he emerged from it and was conscious of voices, loud and metrously, with sleekly parted hair, and moustache waxed to points. He asked her, too, who she was, for the fear that he might wake and find him gone. He seemed relieved with the pain of his feet, to torment him and was conscious of a sharp, stinging torper in which he lay.

He took a moment of interest and returning consciousness during the next two days. His experience had been of a world of illness and pain, the burning anguish of his feet and fevered mind and body. He came through with cold, brought him back to the consciousness of his surroundings. He heard the doctor..murmuring in the corner of "threatened pneumonia" and "temperature," was the object threatened. He began to know and appreciate the nurse who moved about continually to be bending over him. Sometimes he saw her with the doctor, Perley, Bill Cannon, and the old judge and three other men whom he knew by name, some difficulty in keeping from merging into one composite being with a common face. Bill Cannon," and sometimes "Mrs. Perley" or "Governor Talbot."

When on the fourth day the doctor told him that he was "out of the woods and through" with no worse ailment than a frozen foot, he had regained enough of his strength to care and to patience under restraint to express a desire to know who his nurse was. He was in pain, mental and physical, and the satisfaction of attention given by the satellites that so persistently revolved round his bed reaped him into irritable impatience.

The doctor laughed at his desire to know her name, and Perley and Governor and Antelope was as completely out of the world as if it were on the moon. If it were an uncharted island in the unknown ocean, and he a lone survivor. Peopling the invalid up among his pillows, he drew back the curtain and let him look out on the snow-white, painted pane on a world all sweeping white and glittering under the sun. The drifts curled crisp edges over the angles of roofs and fences and broke long curves. The glimpse of the little town that the window afforded showed it completely under the snow blanket, almost lost to sight in its folds.

"Even if you were well and right, you're tied here for two weeks anyway," said the doctor, dropping the curtain. "It's the biggest storm I ever saw, and I've been here all winter. Look around the bar who says it's as bad as the one that caught the Donner party in the pass."

The next day it stopped and the world lay gleaming and still under a fresh fall.

That afternoon Dominick, clothed in an old bath-robe of the doctor's, his swathed feet hidden under a red rug drawn over him, Perley's stores, was promoted to an easy chair by the window. The doctor, who had helped him dress, having disposed the rug over his knees and tucked a pillow behind his back, stood off and looked critically at the effect.

He Looked Like a Dead Man.

"I've got to here you look pretty well best," he said, "and you've got to act your prettiest this afternoon. The young lady's coming in to take care of you while I go my rounds."

"Young lady?" exclaimed Dominick in a tone that indicated anything but pleasurable anticipation. "What young lady?"

"Your nurse, I said," he answered. "Miss Cannon, the young Lady of Perley's Hotel. Don't you know that's the nicest girl in the world? Maybe you don't, but that's because your powers of appreciation are not developed for the last few days. The people here were most scared to death at her at first. They didn't know how she was going to get along, used to the finest, the way she's always been. But, bless your heart, she's been trouble than anybody in the place. There's twelve extra people eating here, besides you to be looked after, and Mrs. Perley and Cora are pretty near run to death trying to do it. Miss Cannon went to turn in and help them. They wouldn't have it, but they had to let her do her turn here taking care of you."

"It's very kind of her," said the invalid without enthusiasm. "I noticed her here several times."

"Kind—she's not an old dear," said the doctor. "Just as nice to Perley's boy, who's a wild thin to the Perleys picked up in the streets of Stockton, as if she was the Prince of Wales. I tell you heredity's a queer thing. How did old Bill Cannon come to have a girl like that? Of course there's the mother to take into account, but—"

He opened the door interrupted him. To his cry of "Come in," Rose entered, a white shawl over her head and she, a book in her hand. While she and Dominick were exchanging greetings the doctor began fussing with medicines into his bag, alleging the necessity of an immediate departure as two cases of bronchills and three of pneumonia awaited him.

"You didn't know there was that many people in Antelope," he said at last, closed the bag of the and picked up his hat. "Well, I'll swear I did not, but I've had all the time I addled enstimate of an old inhabitant. Good-by, old man. I'll look in in the morning to hear a good report from the nurse."

The door closed behind him and Dominick and the young girl were left alone together. A long, awkward silence. He had a hunted, helpless feeling that he ought to talk to the young woman as gentlemen did who were not bursting with the pain of their mental troubles. Moreover, he felt the annoyance of being thrust upon the care of a lady. He didn't even know. Then—

"I'm very sorry that they bothered you this way," he said awkwardly. "I—I didn't think I need any one with me. I'm quite comfortable here by myself," and then he stopped, with a sudden ungraciousness of his words, and reddening uncomfortably. "I dare say you don't want me here," he said Rose with an air of meekness that, guarded by the familiar book and spoon. Then he looked back at her distrust. But as he looked at her cautiously.

"I couldn't take it myself" he said. "I don't think I'd, trust you," she answered.

Dominick glance was held by here, and he saw, under the deprecation of her look, humor struggling to keep itself in sensly suppression. He was conscious of a little puzzled and, with his grip more pronounced than before, said:

"What are you laughing at?"

LACE BUT LITTLE KNOWN

Kingdom of Sussex, Like the People, Somewhat Hard to Get Acquainted With.

London.—The kingdom of Sussex, owning perhaps to age and a long experiance of tronble, has the art of concealment. The country, like the people, is hard to know. Its beauties are often come at with a certain unexpectedness, and the best of them are quite often not discovered at all, except by those who have been at trouble and pains to become familiar with this land of out-of-the-way places. The men of the South Saxons were always great at talking, but it was quite another thing to make themselves together in towns, and to grow quick-witted and resting for years, as townfolk are. Their ways of thought, like those of the oxen who plowed their heavy land, have always been solid and slow. A joke has to be as broad ee e beam before e Sussex men can see it. The fairy stories of the Celts who hewed their wood and drew their water were beyond their imagination, though in some parts the curious word "pierisee" is used as a substitute for fairy, which shows some knowledge of the little people. The county, however, abounds in ghost stories, which seem strange at first sight, as the people are so little ethereal while they are walking about among their neighbors; but on examination the very ghosts have a substantial air, with a something uncanny added, and many of them are practical enough in their doings. Perhaps it is not altogether fanciful to see reflected in the churches, which are also their principal public buildings, the unornamented but solid and enduring qualities of the people of the land. The most prevalent style is the early English. But owing to a scarcity of local stone, the materiels had to be brought over from Caen, and, acting to their want of imagination, the churches are seldom remarkable for fine carving, or for clustered columns and other beauties of stonework; but many of them make up for this by the solidity of their proportions. A remarkably large number of the churches of Sussex stand in the earliest part of their structure from the re-use of local Roman bricks following the preaching of St. Wilfred. The most important, as well as the earliest, of these is that of the ancient port of Bosham, in the extreme west of the county. It is known, indeed, clearly as A. D. 650 Eeppe, a monk, had ecclesiastical charge of this parish. The church is on the site of e Roman temple. Some Roman bricks which form the arch of the chancel door have been dug up near by and put in their present place at a later date.

WIFE IS FOOLED BY, DOUBLE

Woman Sees Teamster on Street and Mistakes Him for Husband.

Chicago.—Somewhere within the city resame a double of Edward Heffern, a teamster. He is no slight resemblance, for he has been mistaken for his wife. Recently Mrs. Heffern raced into the court and dashed up to J. E. Swartz, a bailiff.

"How is it that my husband is out on bail?" she demanded. "He's been given a new lease of life and now he's down on me my money."

"Your husband is still in the bridewell," Mr. Hartel assured her.

"Don't you think I know my own husband when I see him?" she demanded indignantly. "I stood on a corner and saw him picked up and there was my man driving a wagon. I guess I know him—when I look at him sure I know him."

The bailiff looked up the court records and found Heffern committed for six months. He called up the bridewell and found that the man was still there. He called up Heffern's former employer and found that Heffern was in jail. Mrs. Heffern stared at him in astonishment. Then she called a taxicab and, she exclaimed, turning slowly away.

THEATER CLOSED BY STRIKE

Carpenters Quit in New York Playhouses and Actors Leave Via Stage in Sympathy.

New York.—A strike that called out 100 carpenters, musicians, actors, electricians, stage hands, one that caught the actors here assembled performances from being held in two of the city's leading Jewish theaters. The carpenters walked out first, declaring their employers had erected a new theater with the aid of nonunion men. A sympathetic strike followed at once.

When patrons who had purchased tickets demanded their money back and were refused they became tumultuous. Police reserves were called to their lobbies and sidewalk.

INHERITANCE CASES

ONE TAX JUST PAID DIVULGES ROMANCE OF NORTH WOODS.

$20,000 PAYMENT TO STATE

Two States, Minnesota and New Hampshire, Contend Over Fee in the Other Instance Which Involves Gilson Estate.

St. Paul.—A romance of the north woods and the range country which fairly reads fiction is contained in the story of the ill- of Elihah H. Filton of Detroit, Mich., multimillionaire, whose estate has just paid a $20,000 inheri tance tax to State Treasurer Smith.

Was Poor Forty Years Ago.

Forty years ago Filton, with two companions, Deer and Murphy, com paratively poor, came from Michigan into the North country and bought what is now the townsite of Dvelech, Minn. They obtained the land for the timber there was on it, and subsequently disposed of the trees, although they were unable to sell the land it self.

It was not until 1907 that they be gan to realize their property contained some of the richest deposits of iron ore in the world. It made them all immensely wealthy, but Deer and Murphy died before an inheritance tax law was passed and the state obtained nothing from their heirs. Filton died a year ago, and his holdings were appraised at more than $500,000 at that time.

The estate still owns part of the original Dvelech township, but the town was moved some years after its founding to its present site, because its location was over one of the richest of the mines.

Two States Contending.

Minnesota and New Hampshire are contending for the inheritance tax on the estate of Edna M. Filton, who died near Charlestown, N. H., September 14, 1912.

Miss Gilson left bonds, mortgages and stock in Minnesota property and corporations amounting to the $20,000, real estate in this state appraised at $10,000, and $4,000 in North Dakota farm mortgages. They were in a safety deposit vault in Minneapolis at the time of her death and have not been appraised by the Hennepin county probate court.

Made Will in Minneapolis.

According to Assistant Attorney General Stevenson Miss Gilson made a will in Minneapolis in which she said she was a resident of New Hampshire. She lived in Minnesota, however, part of each year and it probably will be put up to the courts to determine her legal residence at the time of her death. As New Hampshire has no reciprocal provision in its inheritance tax law, Mr. Stevenson is of the opinion the whole tax can be collected by Minnesota.

Owned Hotel Interest.

Miss Gilson formerly owned a part interest in the Nicollet hotel, Minneapolis, and was well known in that city, where some members of her family have lived for more than half a century.

PLENTY OF MOISTURE NOW

Farmers in Redwood County Begin Field Work—Has a Wheat Already Planted.

Redwood Falls.—Dragging, seeding and field work generally, have been started in this section. Most farmers have sown some wheat, while others are preparing to plant. Accordine to well-established reports there is an ample supply of moisture. The snow and a light rain have soaked in the soil in ideal condition.

The cool weather has stopped many from planting seed, but it is expected that with the first warm day, the prairies will be alive with men and teams.

The seed problem is of little consequence this year. Nearly all of the farmers in Redwood county and vicinity have no ahipk supply. Enough ground was broken last fall for all falfa, and more will be prepared this spring. A. C. Schmahl, a Redwood county farmer, and Soren G. Gold, who own one of the largest Holstein farms in the state, have experimented with the plant and succeeded in establishing large fields of it that yielded beautifully. It is believed the Redwood county has a future in alfalfa growing. All tuffalo and bluffs have been unusually plentiful here the last year and stock raising farmers have cleared enough to keep their cattle fattened cattle. There is praetlisally no market for seed hay, although there was such an unprecedented yield last year. Farmers are remodeling their stacks with the intention to hold them over until next winter.

Rochester.—Should Rochester citizens have signed a petition which will be presented to the charter commission, asking that body to incorporate in the charter o section that will make it binding to submit to popular vote all franchises to be granted by the city. There has been agitation for submitting franchises to the people, followed the granting of a franchise to the Tele phone company.

WOULD IMPROVE MISSISSIPPI

Object of Meeting of Members of Commercial Clubs in Northern Towns at Cass Lake.

Cass Lake.—"Bemidji to the Gulf!" The above slogan was on a huge banner which greeted the convention of commercial club members of the cities and villages of this section, which met here. Delegates were present from nearly every town along the Mississippi river from Aitkin to Bemidji. Walker, to the south, also sent a delegation, but the hanner bouch came from Bemidji via a special train, more than a hundred strong, with a band of twenty pieces.

The purpose of the meeting was to inaugurate united action of all the towns in the territory above mentioned, with a view of improving the headwaters of the Mississippi to make them navigable. Speakers from near ly every town sending a delegation expressed views on the question, and every one held that, with comparatively small appropriations, the mudd ows and creeks in rivers connecting the lakes forming one of the largest watersheds in the world could be made navigable for quite large boats.

Co-operation of all the towns interested was expressed freely by every one, and before the meeting closed a motion was adopted that the president and secretary of each commercial club in the district act as an executive committee to formulate resolutions to present to the legislature now in session, and later to have the matter brought before congress.

Another meeting will be held soon at a place to be designated by the committee.

FAMILY ILL; TAKES POISON

Ernest Johnson, Living Near Mankato, First Imbibes Alcohol Used for Disinfecting.

Mankato.—With one of his children dead and his wife and three four children sed one of the attending nurses took with carbolic acid, Ernest Johnson, living on the north side of Eagle Lake, eight miles east of Mankato, nearly succeeded in killing himself with the strychalne while suffering from insanity brought on by indigence in alcohol but the nurses had in the house for disinfecting purposes.

His wife found him lying in the barn, suffering from convulsions, but a doctor was called in time to save his life. Neighbors found where he had secured the poison and the barn. Today he was examined as to his sanity and ordered out to hear for the action. He admitted drinking the alcohol.

Two or three weeks ago Johnson's five children were taken sick with what he and his wife supposed to be measles, and they were given some simple home remedies. When the doctor was summoned Monday, however, the 5-year-old boy was dead and two others seriously sick. It was then the case was diagnosed as scarlet fever. Mrs. Johnson and one of the other trained nurses who were engaged were taken with the disease.

WHITE WOULD WED A NEGRO

Farmer Is Able to Halt Marriage of Daughter After License Is Issued.

Marshall.—George Mercer, a negro from Pipestone secured a license here to marry Hilda Sorenson, a white girl, giving her address as Florence, in this county. The couple came to town and tried to get married, but were turned away by the Methodist minister, and also by Justice Pike.

They then decided to take the train to Sioux City. County officials telephoned the girl's parents, residing on a farm two miles from the village of Florence, and instructed the father to take the girl home. Sheriff Mitchell escted the officers to arrest the girl and had not one could secure a which was done.

Miss Sorenson is 22 years old, and declares she will marry Mercer, because she loves him. Both have been working in a local hotel.

Third Time in Six Weeks.

The locomotive left the rails and partly buried itself in the mud, the mail car was derailed, and passengers were shaken up. The engine crew jumped. No one was injured. The train was traveling at about 20 miles an hour when the crash came. Passengers were piled up in the cars, windows were broken, and one trainman was thrown several feet.

The building contained the nffices nf the division officials, the dispatchers' department, the passenger depot and the railway hotel.

WALKS INTO A TRAP

GUSTAVSON CAPTURED AFTER A LONG CHASE—CHARGED WITH MURDER.

IS BELIEVED TO BE INSANE

Small Arsenal Found in His Room—He Alleges that He Has a Good Alibi by Hotel Register.

Minneapolis.—Gust Gustavson, who is believed by the police to be the man who shot and killed W. A. Darling, a Civil war veteran, in the yard at 2021 First Island avenue, early Sunday morning, after having fired point blank at the driver of the patrol wagon, Fred Schroeder, was captured at dawn by Police Sergeant Burke and Patrolman Villas, as he was about to enter the room of a friend at 17 West ern avenue.

Walked Into Trap.

After having baffled and defied the entire police force for nearly six hours, he walked into the trap set for him by Captain Merrick. When the two policemen confronted him suddenly and took him in charge he evinced no surprise, nor did he make the slightest resistance. He was unarmed. Gustavson denies responsibility for the shooting and declares he can prove an alibi.

When his room at 50 Eastman avenue was searched, the police found a veritable arsenal, including three Browpens army rifles, several hundred rounds of ammunition, two knife bayonets and a sheath knife. This, together with his other belongings, was taken to headquarters.

The rifle, with which the shooting was done, cannot be identified. The coat, worn by the man when he was shot, bears a hole in a brick through a window in Miss Anna Arneson's lodging house, 19 Western avenue, also is missing. Chief Martinson says he has evidence that Gustavson used was a Mauser rifle, not over two and one-half feet long, and has ordered his men to look for a smaller weapon than it, as well as for the overcoat, which he thinks were "planted" together by the murderer, or possibly thrown into the river.

From the time of the shooting of the old soldier, which occurred, Nicollet avenue and the business section were swarmed with policemen, every available man having ordered out an hour after the alleged mad man. Every railroad yard as far out as Northtown Junction was watched.

Police Get a "Tip."

It was while searching Gustavson's room that Captain Merrick got the "tip" that the man might go to 17 Western avenue, for he found a card with this address and the name of Olaf Creil. He immediately directed two of his men to watch this place; and later Mrs. Creil told the police of Miss Arneson to protect her about the mandman return.

When questioned at police headquarters Gustavson was surly and uncommunicative. He said he knew nothing of the shooting and that he had spent the night from midnight till the time he was arrested in the Eliot hotel, 122 Washington avenue south. He said this could be proved by the hotel register.

Name on Register.

The man was taken to the hotel handcuffed to Detective Merrick. Here, on the register, was the name "Gust Gustavson," in Gustavson's handwriting. It must have been written some time after 4 o'clock in the morning, according to the night clerk, who said Gustavson must have sneaked in, registered, and then quietly departed again, for he insisted that the man had not been assigned a room.

Patrolman Villas identified Gustavson as the man who, shortly after 4 o'clock in the morning of March 23, broke through the window at 76 Western avenue. Wagon Driver Schroeder also identified him as the man who shot at him about half an hour later. Both these policemen know Gustavson well and say they cannot be mistaken.

The events that led up to the shooting of Mr. Darling began with the shooting of a brick through a window in Miss Arneson's lodging house. The brick crashed through the pane and struck one of the lodgers in the head, but inflicted only a slight wound.

To Have Farm Bureau.

Elbow Lake. — Grant county is awakening to the advantages of having a county farm bureau and a county agricultural superintendent who can look after each acre of its 576 square miles. The West Central Minnesota Development association, with the cooperation of county seat boosters has furnished a powerful stereoption lantern to each of its seven county agriculturists for the purpose of illustrating the effects of farm and stock improvements by better and more economical methods, by means of slides furnished by the Minnesota agricultural extension department showing improved work in corn, silos and other up-to-date methods of farming.

Urges Practical Training.

Morris.—"Adopt the school work to the life of the community," was the message of President Vincent to the school officers of Stevens county, assembled at the county superintendent's Thursday. "Make the school the social center of community life," he said, "and through it so build up the life of the land the home in the country will be the ideal home." President Vincent would not only make the school the center of social life, but he would make it the center of community life.

Locked in a Box Car Two Days.

Red Wing, Minn., March 18.—To be locked in a box car for two days, during which time he suffered severity from cold and hunger, was the experience of Claude Raymond, a 17-year-old boy who was released from a box car in the Milwaukee yards Monday. The boy, who claims Chicago as his home, was hiding in a box car in some little town in Iowa. The car inspector sealed the doors at night and he was made a prisoner. Raymond tried to pry open the door, but failed in his efforts.

Gown of Exquisite Design Product of American Talent

To demonstrate their ability at designing gowns excelling the importations from France, American dressmakers have given their best effort and talent to the most beautiful gowns shown to this country. The photograph demonstrates more ably than words the result of their efforts. The gown is a Grecian gown of white chiffon with rhinestone trimmings, with a Grecian key design and rhinestone girdle.

BLOUSE CUT IN ONE PIECE

One of Tulle Valenciennes Is Made With Neither Trimming Nor Fullness.

The newest cream white blouses are more plain than ever. The prettiest are tulle valenciennes, or a kind of net point d'esprit with figures like those in the valenciennes design. One blouse of this material has not the slightest trimming or fullness except in the back, where there is a tiny bit to cover the opening and make it look like a narrow plait. The entire thing is made in one piece, the sole garniture being little button studs of black velvet to two rows at the throat, both back and front, and on the wrists. The neck is cut low and round, with cording at the base in three rows.

A noticeable feature of this blouse, which was designed in a house in the Place Vendome and intended for the Riviera, is the sleeves made all in one piece, with no extension whatever. It is as though the entire thing had been molded together. No doubt the origin for the coming season will adopt ideas seen in this blouse. We have arrived at a period when cuts and finishes are at their crescendo of plainness. Nothing further is possible because effects could not possibly be any more rigid or simple.

STYLISH SPRING DRESS

Take the remainder of the water and rice, add enough warm water to wash the curtains. Rub on a handful of the boiled rice and scour up and down many times, than rinse in clear water.

Starch in the watar na prepared above. Iron with a medium hot iron when partly dry. The crestonna will look like new.

BLACK SATIN HAT RETAINED

Though White Seems to Be Coming Favorite Color, Yet This Style Is Always Smart.

While colors are to be rampant this year and spread themselves over the world like a gorgeous sunset or a rainbow, yet the tiny black satin hat is to be very much loved. The woman who is in doubt what to choose when she is bewildered by the subject, purchases a black hat for security. Hence, speaking in a general way, the amount of capital required as a minimum for a fully equipped farm would be about one and a fourth times the cost price of the land. This would involve going in debt an amount equal in about three-fourths the cost of the land. In these figures I am assuming that land for trucking and fruit growing will cost $100 an acre, land for dairying $60, and for hay growing $20 per acre. The differences in the prices of land here assumed for the different types of farming will be considered in the articles dealing with the best location for the beginner.

In the irrigated regions of the west, generally speaking, more capital is required for beginning than elsewhere on account of the high cost of the land, but where there is plenty of irrigation water available the yields to be obtained can generally be relied on to compensate for the higher land values.

The farmer whose family is able to do all the labor on the farm can begin with less capital than the individual who must hire a large part of his labor. Again, something depends upon the character of the land itself. If the soil is new and rich there will be little or no expense for fertilization at the beginning, while on an irrigation farm of expense is thus saved; but if the land has been farmed for many years and is in a condition that requires immediate fertilization in order to secure profitable yields, considerable investment must be made in fertilizers in addition to the capital to be obtained. Some men have started in to farming with practically no capital, but this is a dangerous thing to do. Others will require the full amount necessary to buy the land and to properly equip and stock it and two or three years' living expenses in addition.

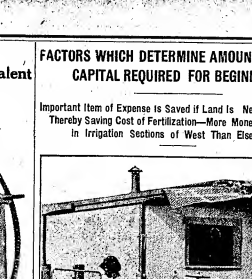
The largest item of capital is, of course, the land itself. A few years ago land could be obtained by homesteading in the irrigated region of the west. Generally speaking, the small farm should be near a city, and for that reason will usually consist of high priced land.

In the matter of the dwelling house one may be content to camp for a year or two in a shack costing not over $150. A fairly good house for a small family on the farm can be built at a cost of from $600 to $1,000, depending on the size of the family and the cost of materials. This assumes, however, that the farmer himself does the hauling and a good part of the carpenter work. Where the farmer can do all the work himself the material for a very good house need not cost over $500.

It is easily seen that with the prices of land varying as they do, it is not possible to state a definite sum as the sum total of capital a firm which a family may begin upon the farm, but in the next article some details will be given which ought to enable the individual to determine the amount of capital with which he can safely begin the business.

FACTORS WHICH DETERMINE AMOUNT OF CAPITAL REQUIRED FOR BEGINNING FARM.

Important Item of Expense Is Saved if Land Is New and Rich, Thereby Saving Cost of Fertilization—More Money is Needed in Irrigation Sections of West Than Elsewhere.



The first home of a young Chicago mechanic who took his bride to a western New York farm was an abandoned freight car. This dwelling was rented at not only habitable but comfortable and this plucky young couple lived in it for two years while getting a start. The third year they built a house that cost $1,000, much of the work being done by their own hands.

No man who is without experience as a farmer could possibly make a success of farming as a business from the beginning; but if a man is a student and is willing to undergo some privation at the beginning there is a chance for him to succeed if he has the necessary capital.

Much will depend upon the amount of risk the farmer is willing to take. Generally speaking, where land prices are normal, a full equipment just about equals the full value of the land. One can usually get hold of a piece of land by paying a small one-fourth of the purchase price in cash and giving his notes for the balance on the land for security. Hence, speaking in a general way, the amount of capital required as a minimum for a fully equipped farm would be about one and a fourth times the cost price of the land. This would involve going in debt an amount equal in about three-fourths the cost of the land. In these figures I am assuming that land for trucking and fruit growing will cost $100 an acre, land for dairying $60, and for hay growing $20 per acre. PROPAGATION OF CURRANT BUSHES

Frequent Shallow Cultivation Should Be Given in Early Part of Season.

Currants should be propagated by division of the plant. Where only a few bushes are wanted they may be obtained by separating small sprouts from the mother-plant, but in nursery-culture plants are propagated by cuttings. The latter are made about 8 inches long and may be set in the row at once, or tied in thin files and stored in a pit over winter. Make the pit in well-drained soil, with the butt ends up, and covered about 6 inches deep with earth. Set out in the spring as early as the ground can be worked. The rows should be 6 feet apart, and the plants 4 feet distant in the rows. Frequent shallow culture should be given during the early part of the season. Your state experiment station at Amherst, Mass., will, no doubt, be pleased to send you a bulletin showing their reports on growing currants and gooseberries in your section of the country, if you write and ask for it.

SKIMMILK IS GOOD FOR THE CHICKENS

Makes One of Best Foods for the Little Chicks and for the Laying Hens.

Skim milk is one of the very best foods for both young chickens and laying hens. The casein, or curdy part of the milk, largely supplies the protein necessary for laying hens, while for fattening fowls there is nothing superior to skim milk or whey, plain, delicate flesh. The milk may be fed either sweet or sour and may be given as a drink or mixed with wheat bran or middlings.

Sour skim milk, or buttermilk, fed to hens confined in yard or small pens, keeps them in health. The acid of the milk supplies the lack of vegetable food they would get up if on grass pasture—the buttermilk aids digestion.

Poultrymen near the wholesale city milk men and creameries can often get skim milk for from five cents per gallon. At this price it is a cheap food.

Buying More Land.

Farmers should not buy more land until that which they already have is producing in its maximum capacity.

Quality of Butter.

Fresh cream added to the batch soon to be churned will not add any thing to the quality of the butter. All of the cream will be better for ripening at least twenty-four hours.

Expect Better Pigs.

If boar and sow are in a strong thrifty condition we have a right to expect more and better pigs.

Reduce Feed Bills.

Scraps from the table will help to reduce the feed bills.

Soaked Bags.

Bedded bags refuse to be used. The smartest are of jet nbiongs, pierced and applied to the net elsewhere with beads of silver or gold, or of silver, gold or white disks. Equally alluring are the bags made of steel mesh with colored beads and those which show the same curious shaded effects that distinguish steel silks. Some of these latter are made in the fashionable pannier shape first brought out in Worth or real bags, and all contain a change purse and a receptacle for mirror matching the lining of the chief receptacle.

Add Ammonia.

White frocks and blouses or underclothing that have a bad color should be first soaked in cold water in which a little ammonia has been added and then given a lemon bleach; that is, a large lemon should be cut into slices, and rind and all boiled up in the boiling pan or small copper. When at full boiling point put in the lemon ammoniine and hull for twenty minutes.

Soak Feed Bills.

Soak feed bills in water before boiling and they will be more easily washed.

Feeds for Calf.

Giving the daily ration of milk in three feeds is better for the new calf than the same amount in two feeds.

Checks Contlene.

Every other ounces of income on the farm may be put the cream check keeps on coming.

HIGH WATER AND ICE JAMS WRECK BIG HEALY DAM

NORTH HALF CARRIED AWAY; REMAINDER IS PRACTICALLY WRECKED.

STEINERT AND TERREBONNE DAMS ALSO HARD HIT.

The big Healy dam in this city has been wrecked by the force of the high water and ice jams. The north half of the dam has been completely carried away and the remainder of the dam looks as if it might have been hit by a Nebraska cyclone.

The dam, or a large section of it, went out about 9 o'clock Sunday night. Previous to that time it had been subjected to a severe strain. The ice went out of the Clearwater river last week, but jammed at the point where the Clearwater empties into the Red Lake river, the ice not having broken up in the Red Lake river. The water in the Red Lake river came up several feet Sunday and late that night the ice broke and the full force of the ice jams from both rivers struck the big dam and wrecked it completely. The dam could have withstood the force of the water without serious damage, but the ice was green, from two to four feet thick, and filled the river from bank to bank several feet high and by the force of the water literally ground its way through the big dam. The water was so high in the Red Lake river for a short time that big chunks of ice were carried across the grade on the north side of the "county bridge". However, the river has been much higher at other times and the damage can be said to be due almost entirely to the condition of the flooding ice which seemed not to be honeycombed in the least but looked as solid as one might expect to see it in January.

The dam was owned by the Red River Power company and the loss is a heavy one. Mr. Brown, manager of the company, who was here Tuesday, said he could not give a definite statement as to what the loss might be.

Although the Healy dam provided one of the best water powers in the northwest, it was not being utilized, though it would have been at some future date and represented a large investment. The power for the local light and power system is generated at the Marshall dam, so the damage to the big dam has caused the people of the city no inconvenience.

The Steinert dam on the Clearwater river in this city and the Terrebonne mill dam were also considerably damaged by the ice and high water.

The water in both rivers has been going down since Sunday.

SELECTION OF SEED

A New Tuber-Unit Method Will Give Even Better Results than the Bin Selection Method.

It has been demonstrated that the selection of the best tubers, regardless of hills, results in higher yields of potatoes than the selection of the best hills as ordinarily done.

The tuber-unit method may, however, give still better results. One carefully selected tuber is used as a starting point, or many may be similarly treated if desired. The tuber selected is cut lengthwise into four pieces from which four hills are grown. If many tubers are used, the single tuber should be selected at digging time for use in planting the next year. Keep each group separate, and decide which is the best principally on the basis of the yield and the desirability of the tubers. Selection is continued from year to year by saving as many as possible of the tubers from the best groups.

Fuller directions for the use of this method of potato improvement may be found in Bulletin 253 of the Agricultural Experiment Station at Ithaca, New York, or the Circular 113 of the Bureau of Plant Industry, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., which has just been issued by Professor Wm. Stuart.

PREPARING DEMONSTRATION PLOTS

Commercial Fertilizer Will be Used on Hill Plots Near City.

A shipment of four thousand pounds of commercial fertilizer was received at the local Great Northern station this week and will be delivered to Hidaje Buril, Jerome Longvin and M. Skala, on whose farms there will this season be J. J. Hill demonstration plots.

These plots are to be cultivated scientifically this season under the direction of experts in the employ of J. J. Hill. Directions will be followed explicitly, the purpose of the demonstration being to show how soil conservation may be possible while at the same time there may be a great increase in the productiveness of the land such more than compensating for the added expense of scientific farming methods.

The demonstration plots will be located on main traveled highways so that results obtained may be observed by all who pass by. The demonstration work will be watched with interest and there is no doubt that it will prove of great educational value.

AID FOR DISTRESSED

One Contribution Has Been Sent. Lotus Benefit Adds to Amount.

Yesterday Mayor I. Lemieux received a letter acknowledging receipt of a remittance of $87.50 sent by Red Lake Falls people as a contribution to the fund raised by Minnesota people for the relief of the flood sufferers.

A further remittance of $21.40 has been made. This represents the receipts of the benefit given at the Lotus theatre Monday night. Every cent of the money taken in at the box office goes to the relief fund. There were 240 admissions at 5 and 10 cents. L. E. Healy contributed his services as pianist and Maurice Brunelle as machine operator. The film company donated the use of the pictures and Manager Underhoff allowed the free use of the theatre. Fred Cyr, chief of police, officiated at the box office and he is sure nobody "got by."

Corn Smut.

Corn smut may occur upon any part of the corn plant, or it may also infect any young and tender part, at any stage of the corn plant's life. During the winter the spores live in the soil or in manure. In this respect corn smut is different from the grain smuts; in none of the latter is there any appreciable danger of infection from spores which have lived over in the soil. In the spring the spores germinate, producing long chains of spores, which are blown about by the wind and infect any growing part of the corn plant, producing finally, smut balls. The spores may live in the soil or in manure piles for years. This, of course, makes seed treatment useless; and the only way to control the smut is to destroy all smut balls, when possible, to prevent them from spreading their spores on the ground or into manure, and avoid placing fresh manure on corn land. Change corn land from year to year also is beneficial.—E. M. Freeman, Plant Pathology and Botany, University Farm, St. Paul.

LATEST THING IN ELECTION LAWS

LEGISLATORS GREATLY EXTEND NON-PARTISAN FEATURES OF ELECTION.

(Special Correspondence.)

St. Paul, April 8.—A law bill providing for it is now law as far as the chances are good that the next legislature, and this includes the senate, will be without party designation. There is even a possibility of the entire state ticket being nameless as far as party is concerned. Get ready, for most anything may happen this year. I refer to the latest thing in election legislation which passed the senate last week, received a ready response from the house and is now in the hands of a conference committee. The house added a number of amendments and the senate does not seem inclined to accept them. The bill started with the senate, where it was introduced as a committee measure. Nonpartisan was the feature throughout and the weather in that line passage did not finish with the elimination of party designation of down the line. The senate majority really felt that way, but it rebelled when the offices of governor and the other state officers were reached. The house had a similar knack, but like the senate it got cold feet. The finish was a bill extending the nonpartisan idea to all county officials and the legislature and making the primary date the first Tuesday in October. Those who objected June se the month for the picking of favorites. This is the only difference between the two bodies and it is why a conference committee has been selected.

As stated, the election bill is not yet a law, but it will be if the Democratic members of the two legislative bodies can bring it about. The measure simply means that the present Democratic membership will be doubled when the next legislature meets, with a possibility of majority control. The day following the passage of the bill by the house Representative Nolan of Minneapolis and others assembled at the almost unanimous reception of the bill and the various amendments got the hunch that they had been tricked and attempted a reconsideration of the vote, but they fell down on the job. The claim made was that the Burnquist interests were behind the whole thing. With party elimination seemed naturally the adoption of a platform of principles with temperance as a feature was out of the question and Mr. Nolan and his followers were peeved. Mr. Nolen's one hope now is that the conference committee will agree and that the bill will be defeated. Here is a tip, however: The bill will stand. There may be some changes, but they will not be material. The primary date is the only matter in dispute.

The present session of the Minnesota lawmakers is not different from the thirty-seven legislatures which have preceded it. The house creates and the senate, sitting in judgment, gives the final decision. Sometimes there is a clash, but in the end the senate prevails. Naturally this condition starts the cry of "politics"

Formal Action Regulating Commencement Expense.

At a meeting of the board of education held this week formal action was taken providing that the commencement gown of no girl of the high school class of 1913 shall cost more than four dollars. There is a further regulation that all of the girls shall wear black choose unless by unanimous vote the girls decide on some other color.

The reason for this actions apparent. Similar action has been taken by school officials in many places and it will not be long until a similar regulation will be one of those governing the commencement events of every public school.

EXHIBITS OF THE STATE ART SOCIETY

WILL BE ON DISPLAY AT THE COURT HOUSE ALL NEXT WEEK.

The exhibits of the practical art work of Minnesota people which are offered for public inspection by the State Art Society are being arranged at the court house and the display will be open for inspection by all interested people Monday. The exhibit will be at the court house for one week, April 14 to 21.

The State Art Society, which is a department of the state government, has taken this means of carrying to the people the simple facts about certain phases of art that are directly related to the everyday home and business life of the average citizen. Art as represented in this exhibition is not the art of pretty pictures, but the art of material, practical things.

The whole exhibition and all of the meetings connected with it will be without charge to the people. That is one stipulation made by the State Art Society. Everything is provided by the society without cost to the city, except that local people pay the small expense of transportation of the exhibit and provide the exhibition place.

The exhibits will be displayed in the northwest basement room and all are invited to inspect them.

Coupelman Michael Kenna, Returned By Usual Majority—Number of Northwest Towns Hold Annual Contests—Some of Results.

Chicago, April 3.—Democrats swept the city in the municipal election, electing 22 aldermen and the superior court judge, city clerk and city treasurer. They secured bond issue of $1,-850,000, urged by the Hearst-Harrison faction of the Democratic party here, carried by a small margin.

The Other Parties.

The Republicans elected 11 aldermen, the Progressives three and the Independents one. The Progressives had candidates in every ward, but failed to show strength, being outvoted by the Republicans by nearly three to one throughout the city. The Socialist vote was consistently scattered through all the wards and was not for long before the Progressive vote.

"Hinky Dink" Returned.

Alderman Michael Kenna, known as "Hinky Dink," the fellow councilman of "Bath house" John Coughlin, of the "Levee" district, has returned by usual by an impressive total, getting 4,358 votes to the Progressive's 711, and the Socialist's 201. He had no Republican opposition.

The single Independent candidate to be elected is Alderman Charles E. Merriam, a professor at the University of Chicago, and until recently, a Progressive leader.

Selling old letters for $2,000 and $2,500 evidences us that the goose quill and sand used in our forefathers, brats up to date writing methods, financially speaking.

A little piece of twine, which dropped into the steering gear of the liner Lusitania, caused $1,000,000 damage. It sounds "fishy," but the Cunard company says it is a fact.

One concern in Atlanta burned $30,000 worth of one time fashionable carriages to make room for the modern auto. And yet the horse is holding his own in price and style excellently well.

A man in Pennsylvania who volunteered for service in the Civil war and was rejected because he was too old has just died. But he established his point, though it took him a long time to do it.

Cleveland officials, who declare that the fly has been exterminated there, evidently plan to spend their summer vacations in some other state.

Just to show that he is a jolly good fellow still, Sir Thomas Lipton will come over next year and lose another race for the America's cup.

The lowa man who missed train connections and was one hour too late for his marriage ceremony should appreciate just how kind fate was to him.

A Chicago professor says that the female of the species is brainier than the male. At least, he is doing all he can to prove the statement.

Now word comes from the University of Chicago that in the future the race will be without hair, teeth or little toes. It might be suspected that the elimination of hair and teeth have been inspired by potential traits in those specialties, but what prejudice exists against such innocuous things or non-moneymakers as little toes is hard to conceive.

The tragedy was believed to have been an accident until a letter, written just before the fatal flight, was opened. In it Lieutenant Porlokat expressed his intention of committing suicide in midair and gave as a reason that he had been a victim of many intrigues.

WALL STREET LITTLE AFFECTED

NEWS OF MORGAN'S DEATH RECEIVED CALMLY.

Had Largely Spent Its Force in Fifteen Minutes—No Firm Change to Result.

New York, April 2.—When the news of the late Pierpont Morgan's death in Rome reached here, expressions of regret at his passing were heard on every side. In the financial district the stock exchange and the Consolidated Exchange passed resolutions of respect to his memory and flags everywhere were dropped to half-mast.

The immediate effect on the mechanism of Wall Street, on account of Mr. Morgan's death, was comparatively slight. On the stock exchange the news from Rome had largely spent its force within 15 minutes after the opening of the market. Mr. Morgan's illness had prepared the financial district for the end and every precaution had been taken to guard against a serious break in prices. At the opening, the prominent stocks declined a point or so, but they received prompt support and rallied quickly. There after the market was dull.

Mr. Morgan's death will make no change in the firm, according to an announcement made by H. P. Davidson, the new bottom senior member.

Nothing is known, as yet, as to how Mr. Morgan, in his will, disposed of his vast estate. J. Pierpont Morgan, Jr., has been his father's understudy for years, and is gifted with financial ability. He served his apprenticeship in the London house of Morgan, Grenfell & Co. He is in the forties and greatly resembles his father. His preparation to take his father's place in the business world has been thoroughly worked out.

Mr. Morgan's body will probably be interred in a mausoleum in Cedar Hill cemetery, Hartford, Conn., which he had erected some years ago in memory of his father and mother.

When the body of Mr. Morgan reaches here from Rome, funeral services will be held in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, toward the completion of which Mr. Morgan was a large contributor.

American on "Hunger Strike."

London, April 3.—Mrs. Pankhurst, Detroit, Mich., has received a letter from her daughter, Zello, who is undergoing two months' imprisonment in Holloway jail for window smashing. Her "hunger strike" and forcible feeding have attracted a great deal of attention. The letter was smuggled out by a released prisoner. It stated that Miss Emerson had just completed three days' solitary confinement for violation of the prison rules. She complained that she was feeling very sick and feared permanent impairment of her digestion.

Minimum Wage Law Favored.

Chicago, April 3.—Walter J. Rubens, a manufacturer of underwear, was the first witness examined by the state vice commission at the hearing announced here. Rubens was questioned at length by Lieutenant Governor O'Hern in effort to obtain information regarding the effect of a state minimum wage law for women and girls. The witness said he favored a national minimum wage law and insisted that a state law would work a great hardship upon manufacturers in individual states until all states had adopted similar legislation.

China Elects Congressmen.

Washington, April 2. — The entire membership of both houses of the first Chinese national assembly under the republican auspices has been elected, according to official advices. The first meeting will be April 6 at Pekin. The Chinese congress contains about 600 members in the lower house and 300 in the upper chamber. The imminence of the meeting of this first assembly has brought President Wilson's administration to the question of whether the Chinese republic is to be recognized immediately.

NEW AMBASSADORS

WALTER PAGE NEW MINISTER TO BRITAIN, WILL GO AT ONCE.

OTHER POSTS TO BE FILLED

Wilson Will Select Majority Before April 7—Rudolph Spreckels Declines Germany Appointment.

Washington, April 2.—President Wilson probably will fill the majority of the nine ambassadorships now vacant before the beginning of the extra session of congress, next Monday.

Monday's developments brought out that Walter H. Page, editor of World's Work, will be nominated for London. Mr. Wilson has been offered and has accepted the ambassadorship to Great Britain. White House officials confirmed the news. Mr. Page will start for London within ten days.

Augustus Thomas, the playwright, said Wilson had considered him, but had been prominently mentioned for diplomatic places, chiefly France and Germany.

Mr. Wilson has been disposed to look further west for some of his diplomatic appointments and there came forward prominently the name of Rudolph Spreckels of San Francisco as probable ambassador to Germany.

Elmore W. Hurst of Rock Island, Ill., who saw the accident Monday, is also said to be slated for a diplomatic post.

Thomas Nelson Page and Joseph E. Willard of Virginia, Justice J. W. Gerard of New York, Frederick C. Penfield of Germantown, Pa., and Henry Morgenthau of New York are among those under consideration for diplomatic appointments, but there have been no decisions as to any of these men as yet.

Spreckels Declines Post.

San Francisco—Rudolph Spreckels declines positively to serve as American ambassador to Berlin. At his office here he said that he is in receipt of no official notification that his name is under consideration by President Wilson and that therefore he cannot to comment only briefly to the effect that he believes his best usefulness will be conserved by a determination to accept no public office.

Indiana is Now Receiving.

Indianapolis, April 2—While northern and central Indiana cities are rehabilating their hard-devastated districts, the waters, disappearing there are tightening their disastrous clutch-es on southern regions. The government relief board, which is composed of Lieutenant Height, U. S. A., towed a barge load of provisions into Lawrenceburg and had the boat's load homes there not under water. When the boat proceeded to Aurora, conditions were found almost as bad with but 600 homes free.

Trains Cannot Move Yet.

Chicago, April 2.—There is little improvement in the train service centering in Chicago from the flood districts of Indiana and Ohio. No attempt is being made by the Monon, Big Four, Erie, Panhandle, Chesapeake & Ohio, and a number of other roads to run trains. The Lake Shore and Michigan Southern railroad and Michigan Central continue to maintain their train schedule between Chicago and New York, while the Wabash and Grand Trunk are running a few trains, although nearly all are late.

ADRIANOPLE STORY TERRIBLE

CAPTURE COST ENORMOUS SACRIFICE OF LIFE.

Wounded Servians Bring First Detailed Account of Attacks On Turks.

Belgrade, April 1.—The first train load of wounded Servians, has just arrived here from Adrianople. They say that the fighting which preceded the capture of Adrianople was the most terrible of the war. The Turks fought with the courage of despair, but the perseverance of the Servians and the excellent leadership of the commanders, resulted in their gaining the day.

One of the wounded officers said: "The siege was an unbroken chain of suffering for the besiegers, which reached its highest degree during the first days of February. The snow lay six feet deep and sentries died on their posts.

"There were days when dozens of men were frozen to death. There were snow plains for 30 miles around; no wood could be found and even when it was brought, fires were forbidden, so as not to betray our positions."

All the officers agree on the terribly losses sustained during the final attack. The fourth battalion of the Drina infantry lost 9 per cent of its men, while we about the average for those regiments which attacked the central forts. The Turkish fire kept up a terrific fire, and the Servians in three attempts against Pasha-zetepe before taking that position out then only at a tremendous cost. Even from the fire of th Turkish 'machine guns.

Steamer Sinks; 150 Rabeis Drown.

Mexico City, March 29.—Lack of familiarity with steamboats resulted in the swift crippling of Mexico's latest steamer, the Progreso, in the state of Tabasco. One hundred and seventy men of the Third infantry, commanded by Colonel Paloma at San Juan Bautista, revolted with the cry "Viva Madero!" They looted the houses and robbed the branch of the National bank and then embarked on a Mascapana river steamer. The steamer foundered a short distance from shore and 106 of the rebels were drowned.

Moser, manager of the Churchill estate, and contained instructions for getting the place in readiness for the president's occupancy. A disturbance will move eastward along the northern border,"

TWO LEVEES ARE OUT

GAP IN CAIRO LEVEE CAUSES LOSS OF AT LEAST A MILLION.

WILL INUNDATE 7,000 ACRES

Hundreds of Residents Fleeing—Shawneestown Dynamites Levee and City Is Under Water as a Result.

Shawneetown, Ill., April 3.—The south levee has been dynamited and the entire city is under water from 10 to 20 feet. No lives are as yet lost.

Of the 2,000 inhabitants of the town 600 are in tents on the ridge a mile back from the city. A detachment of the militia is in charge. The rest of the people have gone elsewhere.

Cairo Very Anxious.

Cairo, Ill.—Cairo spent another night of anxiety over the flood waters. A gap has been cut in the Big Four levee in the drainage district to the south.

The opening in the embankment was about 75 feet long. Only one result awaits the district, and that is that it will fill to a depth varying from 10 to 20 feet. The section has an area of about 7,000 acres, and has by whole big manufacturing, mail order and lumber distributing plants.

Loss Will Be $1,000,000.

The loss from the present flood will not exceed $1,000,000, it is said, and the greatest sufferer of this will fall on the industrial plants.

The break will stop traffic over the Big Four an that road is situated on the levee top. It is predicted that the low lands will be more than two days in filling if no further gaps are torn out.

Cairo feels no alarm from this particular flood, but what another hour may bring is another story. The reading of the gauge shows a trifle more than 53.3. The water is still rising.

Levees Strengthened.

Many carloads of sand and clay have been and still it is believed the levee in front of the drainage district is about as secure as it can be made.

The city is virtually under military rule. Hundreds of women and children have been huddled in the city on trains and steamers to places of safety.

CAIRO LEVEE HOLDING OUT

Current Indicates Something Has Given Way and People Remain Calm.

Cairo, Ill., April 2.—Inhabitants of Cairo have taken renewed hope for the safety of their city. Before nightfall, a strong current came up in the Ohio river and this gave rise to the opinion that something had given way south of here and that the situation, which had been critical, was now more desperate, had been relieved.

The levee is holding strong, though the water has been creeping steadily upward. It is a little more than one foot higher than it was at 4 o'clock Sunday, when the government reading was taken.

Hundreds of persons have left Cairo and many more are preparing to do so. Nearly 10 trains, mail cases and grips are piled here on the railway platforms.

For several miles along the railroad tracks, thousands of laborers are at work filling sacks with sand. These are placed on the levee and started with all speed toward the levees.

Soldiers have been pressed into other duties. They are placing the guarding the sand bags and also are putting barbed wire fences around along the river side of the railroad tracks. Many carloads of sand and clay have been placed back of these.

Mound City, Ill., eight miles north of Cairo, is having a hard fight with the rising Ohio river. The city appealed to Cairo for help and a force was sent along its levee to protect it from waves.

The train was stopped and the body was found almost cut in two. A bullet from an officer's pistol ended the governor's sufferings.

The message was directed to F. F. Moser, manager of the Churchill estate, and contained instructions for getting the place in readiness for the president's occupancy. Herbekenden House is a two-story brick structure, situated on a hill three miles beyond Windsor, Vt.

NEW SCHOOL IS A MODEL

New York Now in Possession of Public Institution to Accommodate 5,900.

New York.—The world's most up-to-date school is now a part of New York's educational system as a result of the opening here of the city's newest high school, which at the same time is one that in the opinion of famous educators, marks the beginning of a new educational epoch.

This unique school will be larger than any except a few of the great universities, having accommodations for 5,900 pupils and 228 instructors. Its curriculum will include, many branches of practical training on a scale not hitherto attempted.

For example, there is a seven-room furnished apartment, in which the students of domestic science can struggle with the problems of housekeeping under actual conditions, and a model banking institution in which the future leaders of high finance can master its intricacies in a manner never before possible.

Then there is a garment factory with many sewing rooms in which management and other details of the garment trade will be taught, a bookbinding plant in which pupils may take a complete course in this industry, a miniature "zoo" for the study of animal life and a roof conservatory in which horticultural knowledge may be gained in regular classes.

While vocational training is provided for in many ways hitherto unattempted, the care of the physical welfare and recreation of the students has been provided for along lines equally unique. For these purposes the new school contains a theater with a seating capacity of 1,500, in which histrionic ability may be encouraged; basket-ball courts, gymnasiums in which particular attention will be paid to the physical deficiencies of the students together with their shower baths and a lunchroom in which 700 pupils can eat at one time.

CROW IS FRIEND OF FARMER

Biological Survey Discovers That Birds Devour Insects Injurious to Man.

Washington.—The biological survey, a branch of the department of agriculture, which studies the problems of what animals and birds are beneficial and what detrimental to the welfare of man, has been busy looking into the case of the crow. The farmer has long accused this meddlesome bird of doing him much damage, and of pulling up his corn. The biological survey found, upon examination, that there were extenuating circumstances. The stomachs of hundreds of crows were examined and the diet of the crow might be definitely determined. In some of these stomachs sprouting corn was found. In some the eggs of the bird which destroys the corn crop was a robber of its fellows. For each grain of corn or bird egg, however, the investigators found that there had been eaten a cut worm or some other insect that was injurious to man. The survey weighed the amount of good that the crow does in destroying insects against the harm it did in pulling up corn and, in individual cases, found that the crow does men more good than harm and therefore should not be harshly condemned.

OLD BILL GOOD, SHE THOUGHT

Negro Woman Puts It In Circulation, Believing Mr. Lincoln's Election Restored Its Value.

Raleigh, N. C.—The Goldsboro negro woman who was instrumental in spurring in the federal court at Goldsboro when a woman confessed that she passed counterfeit $10 bills circulating under the belief that Woodrow Wilson's election restored the money of her masters.

The case reached federal court when a hotel bell boy made complaint upon Will Love, negro, for the ten dollars which he believed was the Confederate note was changed.

Love refused to pay back good money and was arrested by United States Deputy Marshal Smith. The bell boy had made an effort to get the money from a drug store, when he was told that it was worthless. At trial Love, who passed the bill testified that when a woman gave him the money, declaring it good under the present administration.

The woman disappeared her part in it, restored the ten good dollars and said she had found the Confederate note. The commissioner thinks the woman received her inspiration from the perverted promises of Wilson campaigners in the fall.

Mustard Kills Boy.

Canton, O.—Roderick McKenzie, a fourteen-year-old school boy, died from the affects of eating too much prepared mustard. The boy's mother was out of the city and an aunt had been left in charge of the children. The boy exhibited an abnormal fondness for strong mustard and ate a jar and a half of it in a day. The mustard destroyed the mucous membrane of the boy's stomach and he lived only two days.

WAS "HOODOO CASE"

DUMFOUNDED WHEN LIFE IMPRISONMENT SENTENCE IS PASSED.

SLAYER OF MRS. T. HANSCUM

Clinton Smith Must Spend Rest of Life in Stillwater Penitentiary to Decree of Judge.

Minneapolis.—Clinton Harold Smith who killed Mrs. Tamar Hanscum, will spend the rest of his natural life in Stillwater penitentiary indirectly because of the "hoodo" that followed every stage of his trial.

Smith was found guilty of murder in the second degree, all of the jurors agreeing to the verdict because they believed that the greatest punishment Judge Jelley could impose was 25 years. They were dumfounded when the judge sentenced Smith to life imprisonment.

"This case certainly has been hoodooed," said Henry V. Staddan, foreman, 20 minutes later. "It hurts me to think that Smith got life, because all of us thought that the second degree carried a light term of years."

C. M. Harvey of Twelve Bay said that the jurors were "hoodooed," just like the whole case has been.

John Q. Gillman, the juror whose left collar bone was broken last Sunday while leading a horse home, said he was glad it was over, though very sorry for Smith.

The Smith trial has been a remarkable hearing, said Judge Jelley, in the number of interruptions and delays. Considerable delay was caused at the very start in drawing a jury. Before the jury impaneled for vearlement and 16 talesmen had been examined.

Saturday, March 15, Louis Broderberg of Maple Grove, the seventh juror, became ill with quinsy and caused two continuances, and Good Friday caused a third. The fourth was the accident last Sunday to Juror Gillman.

The same night, Fred H. Ayers, associate counsel for Smith, was taken ill with pneumonia. His death occurred Thursday night, 48 minutes after J. T. Hutchinson, principal counsel for Smith, had finished his plea to the jury for clemency.

In his instructions to the jury Judge Jelley paid a high compliment to Mr. Ayers as an attorney, gentleman, father and husband and tendered to the widow and also the sympathy of the sheriff, the jury and court officials.

Commission Plan Proposed.

Thief River Falls. — Arrangements have been made whereby the commission form of government as applied to Thief River Falls will be definitely discussed. Dr. Schlaper of the state university will deliver a lecture on this form of city government and other speakers will be secured. The commercial club is endeavoring to bring this proposition to the attention of the taxpayers, particularly since the city owns its own electric lighting plant and waterworks, and within a month will vote to purchase the new telephone system. The city has made a net profit of about $6,000 annually for several years from its electric lighting plant, with the single exception of the year 1912, in that year the plant was enlarged and the power which had prior to the erection of an auxiliary plant supplied the city was too low to supply ample energy.

Relatives Get 10 Cents Each.

Faribault.—The will of Robert W. Woodville of Northfield, who died March 17, has been probated. In his will he gives each of his relatives 10 cents, while to some of his friends he leaves from $1,000 to $2,000 each. The Old Folks' home, Scenic Hospital, rest room and St. Olaf college, North-field, each are bequeathed $1,000. Should there be any property remaining after all bequests are paid the residue college shall receive the balance. It is expected his relatives will contest the will.

Will Not Wed Negro.

Pipestone. — Indications are, that George Mercer, the Pipestone negro, will fail in his effort to duplicate Jack Johnson's act of marrying into the white race. Mercer's whereabouts are not known here, but Hilda D. Sonquist, the young white women whom he took from here to Marshall where he secured a marriage license, is still with her parents on a farm near Florence. Since the departure of the negro from Marshall the girl has declined she does not care to wed the negro.

"HIRED MAN" VERY WELL OFF

Pay "and Board" Increases More Than 20 Per Cent in Last Ten Years.

Minneapolis.—Right at this time when he is still wearing his coat and before he hores his arms for spring plowing, the "hired man" on the Minnesota, North Dakota or South Dakota farm has a good chance to laugh in his sleeve at the "hired man" for the city, for farm wages have gone up in the last ten years and out in the country the "higher cost of living" that comes around in the city and takes away a wage increase is nonexistent for the wage earner.

It was the case in 1902 that in Minnesota the average farm hand got $27.79 a month. In 1910 he got $31.10. In 1912 he got $27.30, and if the northwest gets a big crop average and a big crop in 1913, which the abundant moisture as spring is opening would indicate, there will probably be one farm work than ever and when a farm hand comes to eats abundance it will bigger range. It is true that city wages have gone up. But in the country there are two magic words that make a mighty difference. Those words are "and board." What matters it if food goes up or down? The farm hand is taken his contract with the former for $25, $26, $27 or $30 a month, as the case may be, "and board." Therefore he eats abundantly and regularly and may be counted to show his fine fare in the kitchen doorway very shortly after the farm housewife lets go the spoon that a meal is on the table. Whatever the cost of the meal to his employer the farm hand has a good deal for nothing. Therein he has the laugh on the city wage earner, especially on the city worker who maintains a home.

The rising scale of farm wages is a favorite theme for the northwest from the standpoint of probability of obtaining more enough to do the work this coming season. How it strikes the farmer who pays the bill is quite another matter.

The federal government has issued a report showing change in the wage scale on the farms. Besides board, the average monthly wage for the year, in the three northwestern states which Minneapolis is the center of trade, shows the following advances:

	1902.	1911.	1912.
Minnesota	$27.79	$31.10	$27.30
North Dakota	25.05	28.80	30.20
South Dakota	23.55	27.00	28.40

In ten years, from 1902 to 1912, farm wages have advanced 22.4 per cent in Minnesota, 20.5 per cent in North Dakota, and 21.4 per cent in South Dakota. This does not include the harvest season. In Minnesota the "average farm hand" who received $1.59 a day with board in ordinary times, got $2.37 during harvest; in North Dakota the figures were $1.91 and $2.39, and in South Dakota $1.65 and $2.40.

INCREASING ACRE A YEAR

Farms in State Six Much Larger Annually—Values Nearly Trebled Since 1890.

Minneapolis.—The average size of Minnesota farms has increased nearly an acre a year for the last twenty years, according to a report from the extension division of the university agricultural college, of which A. D. Wilson is head.

Average in 1890.

In 1890 the farmers of the state were cultivating an average farm of 159.7 acres, and the farmer today has an average of 177 acres. The total number of farms at the present time is 156,197. The report is to be issued to the farmers of the state, graduates of the Minnesota school and college of agriculture, to show the improvements in the farming conditions that have been effected by the two institutions since their founding twenty-five years ago.

Farm property in Minnesota today is valued at $1,416,611,237, according to the report, and the value of the 1912 crop is placed at $218,602,250. The farm lands are worth $1,019,102,027; the buildings, $243,350,295; the implements and machinery, $52,328,166, and the livestock $161,641,146.

Farm Values Nearly Trebled.

With the average acreage increase of one acre a year, the farm valuation has almost trebled in the same length of time, since 1890, averaging $6,416 at the present time, as compared with $2,549 twenty-three years ago. There has been a proportionate increase in the value of all other farm holdings according to the report, although the land and buildings have taken the biggest jump, averaging $2,035 at present and $2,919 in 1910. The buildings have not had as much to do with this difference as the land, however, it is said.

With the increase in the average size of farms and value there has been a similar increase in the per acre farm value, which amounts to $10.45 at present and was but $18.22 twenty-three years ago. Implements and machinery have shown a corresponding increase on the farms. Besides board, the average monthly wage for farm labor, in the three northwestern states which Minneapolis is the center of trade, shows the following advances:

Minnesota	$27.79	$31.10	$27.30
North Dakota	25.05	28.80	30.20
South Dakota	23.55	27.00	28.40

In ten years, from 1902 to 1912, farm wages have advanced 22.4 per cent in Minnesota, 20.5 per cent in North Dakota, and 21.4 per cent in South Dakota. This does not include the harvest season. In Minnesota the "average farm hand" who received $1.59 a day with board in ordinary times, got $2.37 during harvest; in North Dakota the figures were $1.91 and $2.39, and in South Dakota $1.65 and $2.40.

DOINGS OF THE SOLONS

Minnesota Legislative Affairs of the Past Week—Law Makers Hard at Work.

St. Paul, April 1.—While admitting that the gold cure for drink principles are not excessive, and that the state printer, Joseph Mannik, is a competent official, still the house committee on economy and expenditures is not satisfied. It thinks a change is desirable.

After several weeks of investigation and the employment, of expert printers, who said that the state was getting its money's worth, the committee recommended to the house that the state board of control hereafter have jurisdiction over all state printing. The board now has but one member, an employe of the board. State printing costs the taxpayers about $600,000 during legislative years and about $45,000 in other years.

Solon's Deadlock Broken.

The passage of the initiative and referendum bill by the legislature was assured last night when the deadlock between the house and senate conference committees, which had existed for more than three weeks, was broken. An agreement was reached upon the necessary percentage of votes to carry constitutional amendments. This had been the only issue between the two houses.

Under the agreement it will take a majority of all those who voted at the election on forthcoming amendments ruling on the question, to pass a constitutional amendment. But in no case less than three-eighths of those voting at the election carry the amendment.

Primary Bill Is Approved.

The senate election committee unanimously put its stamp of approval on the primary election bill yesterday. This makes it almost certain that the bill will be favorably acted the election machinery with which to express directly their choice of candidates for state and national position.

Representative Lundeen, of Minneapolis, framed the bill which was passed by the house committee, standing vote. It went to the senate election committee of which Julius Hayerott is chairman. It was favorably reported before the legislature met, Mr. Hayerott said, but was held back by the senate when the measure reached him. Only a few minor amendments were made and than the unanimous approval given.

Anti-Gamblers' Passes Are Safe.

Members of the lower house decided today that newspaper passes to theaters and baseball games would not influence their votes on any measure affecting these forms of amusement. The Green bill prohibiting state officials from accepting passes to these amusements was killed by a vote of 86 to 45.

Advance Fifty Bills.

The House Saturday afternoon advanced fifty more bills to the calendar. Among them were bills by Senators Bowmaster increasing the salary of the clerk of the juvenile court and clerk of the district court office, the latter measure by Senator Ramsay of county court reporter, Senator W. W. Smith, bill increasing salaries of the county surveyors office, Senator Peter Van Hoverbeek bill increasing salaries in the county auditor's office and James Hamilton's bill increasing salaries in the county treasurer's office.

St. Paul, March 29.—After passing the senate elections bill, with the provision that members of the legislature elected to congress shall resign, that the Nixon organization of the house was the senate was defeated 37 to 27. The legislative non-partisan provision was defeated by the senate. The claim was made that senators opposed to the initiative and referendum believed that the house would kill the legislative feature and that the entire bill itself would die.

Presidential Primary Bill.

The Sanborn bill which gives to voters the actual right to express their choice for president and the preferential primary day, will reach the senate elections committee Monday with the recommendation that it do not pass, which has considered it. Taken altogether indications are that the bill in its subcommittee last night. Not one of these will rob the bill of the rights it carries to the voters.

Utilities Board Proposed.

A new public utilities bill said to be a compromise measure for several months past between Governor Eberhart and the legislature, has been introduced in the house by the committee on general legislation.

It provides for the appointment of a public utilities commission which shall have the authority to regulate rates and service and prescribe uniform service corporations in the state. The bill proposes to carry on the work of commissions without expense to the state, the cost of its maintenance coming out of the tax on the gross earnings of the public utility corporations. The bill took its place on general orders.

Next Week's Outlook.

Three of the most important measures still awaiting action in the legislature will be special orders of business the senate next week. These include workmen's compensation, the farm good roads bill and the Nolan bill giving the city council the right to regulate rates of public service corporations. The two latter have passed the house.

To Consider Appropriation.

An appropriation of $25,000 for the flood victims of the Ohio district is to be considered by the house committee on appropriations.

The Minnette resolution, calling for an appropriation of $15,000 to pay the cost of sending a special train into the flooded district, loaded with clothes and provisions, was withheld yesterday until the legislators learn the exact conditions in Ohio, to determine how much help Minnesota should give.

Andrew Davis, chairman of the house committee on appropriations, said yesterday that he is not sure never has been opposed to a substantial appropriation for the flood victims in the Ohio district.

Compulsory Bill Is Up.

Opposition to the bill to restore citizenship to persons convicted of a felony who have served their sentence or paid their fine, appeared in the house yesterday when an attempt was made to have the measure come to a vote.

St. Paul, March 28.—The house committee on capitol building and grounds Wednesday recommended the Westlake bill for passage. The bill as reported in the house yesterday, With the approval of the house committee on capitol, will be a law. Under the Westlake bill legalizes the sale of cigarettes in state and makes it a misdemeanor punishable by a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $100 for the first violation of its provisions.

Liquor Amendment Passed.

The senate elections bill, extending the Australian primary law to all state and legislative offices, legalizing the Bull Moose party and prohibiting signing of more than one petition, was passed by the house yesterday by a vote of 74 to 17. But one amendment to the senate measure was adopted. This changed the date of the primary election for partisan offices from the third Tuesday in June to the first Tuesday in October.

Adoption of the senate provision which extends the non-partisan primary to the members of the legislature, came as a surprise to many.

Holds Up Benefit Fund.

In the face of pleas for aid for the flood sufferers in Ohio, and threats from Governor Cox and from the national president of the Red Cross society, Andrew Davis, chairman of the house committee on appropriations, yesterday held up the old which other members of the Minnesota legislature have been asked to contribute.

It was proposed by Frank Minnette, representative from Nobles county, to maintain a practically exclusive market to sell without duty to the world. Consciously or unconsciously, we have built up a set of privileges and exemptions from competition behind which it was easy by any, even the crudest, forms of combination to fix and $1,000.

As far as the house committee on tampers are concerned, there will be no midnight id for Minneapolis, St. Paul or Duluth. The Scheffler-Hawkes-Healy bill providing for such closing will save them a fine yesterday and a report of indefinite postponement today. Under the scheme was to have saloons open at 7 a. m. and close at 12 o'clock.

Charitable and religious organizations, fraternal societies, posts of veterans of the Civil war and of the Spanish-American war, and posts of the United States army, navy or marine corps, and the state militia, if passed, would take from them the right to sell liquor property which they now control. The bill introduced by representative James Dwyer of Minneapolis, has already passed the senate.

This bill takes away from such organizations the right to say whether or not they will sell liquor on their property. It is an amendment to the anti-treating law. It provides that they yield, the object of the tariff duties henceforth laid must be effective competition. A meeting of Ascot to can wha by contest with the wits of the world is what we want.

Development, Not Revolution.

It would be unwise to move toward this end headlong, with reckless haste, or with strokes that cut at the very roots of our business life, or amongst us by long process and at our own initiation. It does not start

WILSON SUBMITS FIRST MESSAGE

Congress In Extra Session Is Told What President Expects Done

DOCUMENT UNUSUALLY BRIEF

Tariff Schedules, Says Chief Executive, Must Be Altered to Conform With Modern Conditions According to Party's Pledge.

Washington, April 8.—In his first message to congress a document of unusual brevity, President Wilson today told the senate and house what he has been and may expect in the way of revision of the tariff, the task for which mainly the extraordinary session was called. Following is the text of the message:

"To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I have called the congress together in extraordinary session because a duty was laid upon the party now in power at the recent elections which it ought to perform promptly, in order that the burden carried by the people under existing law may be lightened as early as possible and in order, also, that the business interests of the country may not be kept too long in suspense as to what the fiscal changes are to be to which they will be expected to adjust themselves. It is due to the whole country that the tariff debate must be altered. They must be changed to meet the radical alteration in the conditions of our economic life which the country has come about within the last generation.

This is the whole form and method of our industrial and commercial life and the tariff schedules have grown obsolete and unjust because they were framed to meet conditions which have long since every upper body has had this charge rising in its teeth—but on the square door reader, the present senate is not as bad as some would paint it. It is a deliberate body, something that is brought out veiled charges to the effect that the senate is open in charge. However, do not be too hasty in your conclusions. It takes six years to make a real lawmaker out of the average man. The first two years he wants to burn up the time. The next two years he has a hunch and the last two years if he is fortunate enough to get back, his one idea is to kill everything. Quite a few think the senate is a nemice to good government, but believe me, the builders of our state constitution builded well when they created this particular body. The senate in its deliberate way has killed many a bad bill that would now be decorating the statute books.

Governor Eberhart has a new secretary. His name is George F. Aadland and he is a former Minneapolis newspaper man. He succeeds Ralph W. Wheelock, who last week took his place on the state board of control as successor to Peter N. Blendel, the Democratic sacrifice at last fall's gubernatorial contest. Mr. Wheelock has been private secretary to the governor ever since the latter took office. He is also an old newspaper man and has been a most efficient official. His friends readily admit the habit of his friends readily has helped him out considerably and he has been a very valuable asset to the governor in every particular. He has a thorough knowledge of office detail and that is what is needed on the board of control. George Aadlner, who will hold the secretary's job during the balance of the session, is well known to many throughout the state as a political writer and will fill the place in a most acceptable way. Mr. Blendel, who retires from the board of control, has not said what he will do in the future, but it is generally understood that he will get a federal position under the Wilson administration. He is said to be a candidate for the job of collector of internal revenue, but will not admit it.

Capitol circles were enlivened last week by a personal encounter, better described as a free fight, between Herman A. Rider, present executive agent of the game and fish commission, and Sam Fullerton, the pugnacious deputy fire marshal who formerly held Mr. Rider's job. The encounter took place in the washroom adjoining the room where the board of control meets and there were no witnesses to the fray the word of the combatants must be taken for what occured. The verdict is not unanimous, however, as both differ as to the incidents. It is perfectly plain, however, that some one called some one else a liar and that some blood was spilled, as the floor of the washroom was outlined in a delicate mosaic of blood spatters. It is stated that there has been bad blood between Rider and Fullerton for some months and that it was all caused by the house committee investigation of the game and fish department. It is said that Rider accused Fullerton of starting the trouble and Fullerton denied it. It is said that the trouble when the two met in the washroom. The net result of the battle was that Sam has a black eye and his head is cut; Herman has a silver in his cheek from swinging and both broken end of a cane which Sam broke over his head, a welt across the bridge of his nose and a bump on his forehead.

The troubles of the game and fish commission do not grow less as a result of the fight. It has been charged to call attention again to the conduct of the department and it seems likely that the legislature may take some action before, although it may not follow the recommendation of the committee that the service be placed under the direction of the forestry department. Fullerton did not benefit either by the incident. He has always been in the good graces of the board of commissioners for some time. He has always been a disturbing element. He has lost several personal associates because of this and has not helped his cause. It is understood that as a result of his trouble with Rider he will be let out at the first opportunity. This may not happen until the legislature adjourns, because Charlie Keller, the fire marshal, and his friends are also investigated there and the Keller family, including Harb, 38, have a habit of using the state watter over a fish license at Lake Shetek, Murray county.

Ten days more and the thirty-eighth session of the Minnesota legislature will be history. It has put 175 laws on the statute books to date, with more to come. It has spent a busy active and referendum act, a new election law, a new sky law, "anti-" pension act, reapportionment and the Dunn good roads bill. The legislators have not shown any extraordinary ability, but they seem to measure up to the average.

Congressman Sydney Anderson, who put Dr. Towner out of business, now knows what troubles means. He has broken with the man who made him, O. M. Lavang of Lanesboro, and Lavang is not a bit backward in making his feelings known. Lavang was Anderson's secretary up to April 1 when he was succeeded by Rebman. Rebman's help pay the congressman's stenographer at Washington out of his $125 a month salary as secretary. He drew the salary while living at Lanesboro and seldom visited in Washington. It seems the irony of fate that Lavang had the chance make the race for congress as a Progressive before it was offered Anderson but refused, thinking there was no chance for him to win. He backed the young lawyer for the place and now says the man he lifted from obscurity and poverty 6 fame and $7,500 a year has turned against him.

Many over the state will learn with regret of the serious illness of Carl Wallace, senator from Minneapolis. He is said to be rallying now and all many friends in the legislature and throughout the state hope he will be able to be about soon. His is one of the ablest men in the senate.

The house committee of expenditures says the government of the state costs the taxpayers $5.08 each a year. Samuel O. Iverson, state auditor, says it only costs $2.37 each. Anyway the people generally think they are paying the limit.

The senate committee and house appropriations committees are now wrestling with the salary problems. Heretofore the governor's secretary has been paid by fees as well as the clerk of the supreme court. It is the intention to put both on a salary basis. Governor Eberhart has recommended $5,000 for his secretary and Clerk I. A. Caswell will probably get the same amount.

TERREBONNE

(Intended for last week.)

Oh Spring! Oh Spring!
What a beautiful thing
You cause hearts to leap,
Make the little birds sing,
And the cold blasts of winter
You soothe, and our woes—
Like the fierceness of bowthorne,
Toned down by the rose.
Oh Spring! You approach,
As with bat in hand
Some timid young gallant
Who ain't got the sand;
As Host Mum. salutes you,
Her banners unfurled
The brooke to the woodland
Who's waters are curled.
Oh Spring! You are here,
I can tell by the nest
Of the bitchjay or wren
Or the robin's red breast,
While the frog croaks kid-junk,
And the wild bird does coo,
Bob-o-link sings the refrain
Bob-o-link, Bob-o-leo.

BOWSER IS GOOD.

Phenomena Explained by His Worthy Spouse.

THE EVENING BEGINS SADLY.

But After Raving For Quite Awhile He Capitulates and Mrs. B. Does Not "Return to Mother"—The Waiting Game Wins Out.

By M. QUAD.

(Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press.)

I KNEW that I was in for it.

If Mr. Bowser came home feeling good natured there might be only a few "bumps" of disgust, but if things at the office had gone wrong then he would break loose.

I had three hours to watch to make up my mind, and when he arrived I had decided what to do.

You see, the other afternoon a messenger boy brought our cook a telegram to the effect that her sister, ten miles away, was very ill and wanted to see her at once. She was ready to leave in half an hour, and I took hold of the work and had a good dinner awaiting Mr. Bowser when he reached home. He entered the house in a pleasant mood, but no sooner had I broken the news to him about the cook than he said:

"I thought it was about time for another kickout! By John, but can't you keep a girl for fifteen minutes without a row?"

"We haven't changed girls in five months," I replied, "and there would have been no change now but for circumstances. Annie will probably be back in a day or two. Meanwhile I can do the cooking."

"Meanwhile I have got to live on crusts and bones and feel that things are upside down!" he growled. "If there's a worse row brews in America I'd like to know where it's located. The cook has no sick sister. She simply made that an excuse to get away from here. All your cooks do that when they can't stand your ways."

"What is wrong with my ways, Mr. Bowser?"

Mr. B. Kicks.

"Everything. You crush a girl to the earth. You refuse her a day's pay. You are unused with your nose cocked up and demand that she get down on her knees to you. I have always pitied them from the bottom of my heart, poor things!"

"That's probably the reason why two of them said we made monkeys eyes and tried to flirt, and two others called you an old fool and wouldn't stay even when I offered to increase their wages?"

"Woman, do you know what you are saying?"

"I do."

"Then, by the great horn spoon, but I feel like busting your ears! I make croquee eyes at your cook! I try to flirt with her! I—I—"

"Be calm, Mr. Bowser. There is no need of any quarrel over this thing. I have made up my mind that you could come home to talk just as you have done and I determined on my course. I have no trend toward backed."

"And you'll go home to your mother?"

"I will."

"And there'll be a separation and a divorce?"

"Certainly!"

"And—and"—

"And that's all. After three or four years you can marry some one who'll run your house to suit your ideas."

"I was going to propose that very plan, Mrs. Bowser, and it is the most sensible thing you have said in six months. Yes, divorce is inevitable, but, of course, I shall see that you are well provided for as to alimony."

Separation and Divorce.

Neither of us touched the dinner I had been to such pains to cook. I left the table set and went up to my room and began to pack my trunk. Bowser and after a few minutes I slipped softly downstairs to find Mr. Bowser had taken off his coat, rolled up his sleeves and was washing the dishes. He was washing up the dishes.

"So it's separation and divorce!" he growled as he vented. "All right. It was bound to come sooner or later, and why not now? I have a wife will take a crowbar and pound on the piano to make her hard working husband sick. I suppose it's time there was a divorce. I've talked and talked, but it has done no good. She's got some good points about her, but it will have to be—have to be."

He stumbled away below his breath while he was taking down the roller towel to use as a dish towel, and then I heard him say:

"Wonder what the mother-in-low will say about it? I know, however, She'll give me an awful roast. Shouldn't wonder if she'd come right down here and do her song and dance act and make it hot for me. She'll get a way about her to make a fellow's hair stand up. Mebbe I was a little hasty —mighta been. If Mrs. Bowser hadn't walked off and left me to wash these dishes"—

I had to go up to the sitting room to avoid discovery, and twenty minutes later he found me there.

Neither of us spoke.

Both sat down and stared into vacancy.

He Becomes Nervous.

A woman can hast a man at a welfare getting and after a quarter of an hour I fired Mr. Bowser out. He began to fiddle his feet and twiddle his thumbs, and at length he got up and went into the library. I listened at the keyhole, and as he walked to and fro I heard him say:

"She she there like a lump on a log and says nothing. If she expects me to speak first she'll get sadly left."

He was silent for a minute, during, which he kicked the dictionary across the floor and banged a chair about, and then he resumed.

"Mrs. Bowser has got her trunk packed and will want to go in the morning, and I don't know—don't—I'm blunder I'm going to do. I can't get a housekeeper in here, and I'll be hunged if I go to a hotel or boarding house. What did she want to fire up the way she did for? She knows my little ways and has always put up with them till this time, but the minute I begun to talk up and she'd been packing her trunk to go home. Never was so astonished in my life, but, of course, I had to tell her to trot along. By gum, by gum!"

I heard him approaching the door, and I got back into the sitting room. He came in after a moment, trying hard to look careless, and after picking up and down he took a chair and remarked that it was mowtog outdoors.

I replied that it was pusillie.

He said that we'd had very little snow thus for this winter.

I replied that I hadn't been totermined.

He then took the cot on his lap and asked if I thought her weights was fullog.

He then stepped from cot to mother in-law and hoped she was well.

She is well, thank you.

He Gives In at Last.

Thec Mr. Bowser began to shuffle and twiddle again, and in another minute he rose up and returned to Dr. Henry. I took up my former position just in time to hear him say:

"The old girl's got her back up for fair this time. She ought to see that I'm doing my best to make up with her, but she won't have it. Wonder if she expects me to get down on my knees to her. I won't do it! I did for it, but it made me in a hole just the same. What to the old Harry is going to become of me if she goes?"

Then he got mad and kicked that poor dictionary back again and back it went to the other way, and it was two minutes before he went on:

"Bowser, you are an old ass! Darn your cuts, but why do you jump on anybody with both feet the way you do? She came home and find that the cook has been called away by sickness—legitimate sickness—and you immediately begin to blow and bluster and walk around on Mrs. Bowser. Yes, you are an old crank, and you've got yourself into a nice fix at last! What you want to do is to go right down there and chuck that woman under the chin and beg her pardon and—No, you can't do that. You want to put on your hat and overcoat and go out and slam the door behind you. She'll probably get scared and come down off her high horse and call you back, and then you can make up without loss of dignity."

I got out of the way, and Mr. Bowser put his plan in execution. It didn't work. He stood on the steps for five minutes, waiting for a call, and when I came in he was pacing the house with crestfallen demeanor. Hanging up his hat on the hall tree, he came back into the sitting room and stood and looked at me.

I returned his gaze.

"While I'm an ass—"

"Yes, you are that, and I want to say"—

"So do I. I'm not going home to mother in the morning."

"Then—Well, then, Mr. Bowser and I had a happy evening together, and in his exuberance of spirits he lifted the cat to his shoulder and went dancing around the room like a boy ten years old. I think he'll be good for at least a week to come.

There When It Happened.

When apprehended and charged with larceny the man had admitted his guilt, but at his trial his attorney defended him with much brilliancy.

"Gentlemen," said the judge, with a benevolent smile, "the prisoner says he is guilty. The counsel says he is not. Surely one cannot be guilty and not guilty at the same time. You must decide between them."

Then, after an effective pause: "There is one thing to remember, gentlemen. The prisoner was there and his counsel was not."—Metropolitan Magazine.

ST. HILAIRE

John Buchoff was in town Wednesday on his way home to Wylie after an extended visit with a sister and old time friends at Springfield, Ohio.

UNITED STATES CREAM SEPARATORS

Cost More than Other Separators

And Are Worth More

Price, $25. and up

You would not expect to buy the best cow in a herd for the same price as the poorest cow. Neither would you sell your most productive cow at as cheap a price as your least productive cow. So it is with the United States Cream Separators.

The very fact that the U. S. has won such awards as The World's Record for Close Skimming and the Grand Prize at Seattle are obvious proofs of highest excellence.

The very fact that a United States Cream Separator (containing non-rusting nickel-silver skimming sections) can be mechanically cleaned in only half the time needed to wash either separators is a priceless boon to any farmer's wife.

The very fact that the United States is the most simple and convenient with its self-regulating, automatic oiling, through-covering and enclosed gears has caused the best known and practical dairy men to select it for their own use.

We do not claim to give you something for nothing any more than you would from us or your best cow; but we can sell you, at a fair price, the cream separator you will admit to be the best you have ever seen, if you will simply call at your home.

Harvest of the Elements

How Torrent Rushed Through Columbus.

This picture gives no idea of the difficulties that beset the rescuers of flood victims. The water rushed through the streets with tremendous velocity, forming whirlpools and eddies that threatened to swamp boats.

Using Ropes to Make Rescues at Dayton.

The waters at Dayton rose so rapidly that many who started to escape found they could not successfully breast the waves. Ropes were stretched across the streets in many places, and by clinging to these ropes those who were marooned reached safety.

Tons and tons of debris were swept along with the rushing water. This wreckage collected against bridges and houses, forming dams, which still further increased the height of the flood.

Where Many Were Killed In Omaha Tornado.

This picture shows the damage done at the corner of Lake and Twenty-fourth streets, Omaha. Twelve persons were killed here, several of them being passengers in the trolley car which was wrecked. Others died in the houses nearby which were demolished. This was directly in the heart of the storm's path.

How Buildings Were Wrecked In Omaha.

A New Phase of the Servant Question

By LOUISE B. CUMMINGS

Two convicts sat together in a prison yard smoking themselves and smoking their pipes. Other prisoners were either lounging about or taking exercise walking to and fro, while the guards kept an eye out for all to make sure that they were not getting together in one or more groups. The two men smoking together, though they had no acquaintance, opened conversation in the usual way.

"What are you here for?" asked one.

"The servant question."

"What's the servant question got to do with yer bein' within walls?"

"Oh, it's a long story; but, seein' we've nothing better to do, I don't mind tellin' it to you."

"Go on."

"I've always made it a rule to work through servants. I can get more advantages by totin' 'em in to a deal than in any other way. They make it dead easy for a feller. The easiest job I ever got was this way. I was walkin' along a street in a suburban town, where the houses wasn't too near together, lookin' for a job, when I come to a decent lookin' house—not too fine, for in the finest they have safes; nor too poor lookin, for in them kind they don't have nothin' to put in safes; but the middle kind, where they have good things but not so valuable that they keep 'em out o' the way—as I was sayin, I come to a house of the middle kind and goin' around to the back door, knocked and asked the maid if there was any old clothes in the house they didn't want. I was out o' a job and would be glad of anything I could get.

"She looked at me, and, says she: 'You don't want any old clothes. You're lookin' for a job, but not the ord'nary kind of a job—one with more profit in it than doin' odd jobs at 20 cents an hour.'

"She looked at me kind of knowin' and I twigged right off. 'I wouldn't mind a peril,' I says, and she asked me what I meant and I says 'haires.' 'That's fair,' she says. 'When do you want to begin work?' 'I always work at night,' I says, 'when other people is eligible'.

"Well, I made a deal with her right off and I was to do the job the next night. The maid was goin' to have friends to dinner then, and she was always expected to put away the silver, the best bein' brought on on swell occasions. I took to that idee and pulled out a fiver to bind the bargain. After talkin' my instructions how to git in and what to do next I goes away.

"The next night about 11 o'clock I went to the house, and they was jist puttin' out the lights. A cop went by slingin' his night stick, so I waited till he'd put a block or two between me and him; then I went into the back yard and sat down in a dark place for half an hour, givin' 'em time to get to sleep. The maid had left a stepladder outside, 'cause it was a basement house, and I was to git in at a back kitchen winder on the main floor.

"I put off the job till I felt that all that was goin' to sleep had gone there; then I puts the stepladder agin the wall and goes up to the winder. It went up as slick as if it had been greased, and, feelin', I found the maid had soaped it. 'This made me feel sure she wasn't trickin' me and was doin' everything to help me on. I got down to the door inside and followed the direction she'd given me, passin' from the dinin' room into the pantry, where the maid said she was goin' to leave the silver, tellin' her mistress the next mornin' she'd forgot to take it to her room, where she kept it nights, so she wouldn't have to waken any one by gittin' it in the mornin'.

"I got into the pantry all right and was feelin' for the swag when an electric went up and there stood a cop at each of the pantry doors. They had me cooped up, and I was covered by both of 'em at the same time.

"It was all up with me, of course. They clapped the bracelets on me and took me out into the hall. All the lights was turned up, and downstairs I saw the gentleman of the house comin', with the maid behind him, only they all was dressed in their regular clothes. I was all broke up by seein' the maid dressed like a lady.

"'Well,' said the gentleman to his wife, 'this doin' your own housework is a savin' in more ways than one, isn't it, my dear?' 'There's a thousand dollars' worth of property held on to by your bein' maid and cook and all the other servants, and I'll put half of it into a brooch for you.' Then, turnin' to the cops, he said to 'em: 'A year ago, when we was spendin' a thousand dollars a year for servants, we lost $5,000 more in one night. Luckily my wife likes housework; isn't literary, don't write papers for women's clubs and is a profitable woman to have in the house.'

"Then he jist takes her in his arms and gives her a smack, and she was the proudest lookin' woman you ever seen. But I noticed that when she seen me between two cops she looked sorry for me."

The convict paused and then added reflectively: "I don't say that all servants is in with us, but I does say that if all the ladies in the land gits to doin' their own housework the most profitable part of our business 'll be gone. But I don't reckon they'll do it. The winmen is pittin' brainy, and they likes to write papers and spout 'em. But we got to look out for them, as isn't us to them literary peaks."

Senator Luke Lea of Tennessee was describing a tariff argument wherein he had been the victor.

"My opponent," he said, "dodged the argument with silly quips. He was like the chap on the stage who answered by mental arithmetic any problem you put to him. One of the audience asked this man:

"'How far off can you hear thunder?'

"'I can't tell you,' was the reply.

"'Why not, sir?'

"'Because I'm a lightning calculator.'"—Los Angeles Times.

SYNOPSIS.

Bill Cannon, the bonanza king, and his daughter, Rose, who had passed up Mrs. Cornelius Ryan's ball at Rex Beach's Alaskan home to attend the dance at Antelope, Nevada, finds cafe on the outskirts of town a ball invitation for his wife, and is refused. The disappointed Mrs. Cannon has had her heart set on the affair. Dodge lunch and here trapped into a marriage with Dorothy Herrick, a stenographer, of several years his senior. She squanders the money he gives her on a trip to Europe, but to wipe away Cannon and his daughter are snowed in at Antelope. Dominick Ryan is rescued from starving in a blizzard by Cannon and brought to Antelope. Antelope is cut off by storm.

"I was tired," he said slowly. "I'd worked too hard and I thought the mountains would do me good. I can't sleep at the bank when I want to and I thought I'd take a holiday too come up here where I was last summer. I knew the place and liked the hotel. I wanted to get a good way off and the city and away from my work. As for walking up here that afternoon—I'm not sorry, and I never thought for a moment such a blizzard was coming down."

He lifted his head and turned toward the window, then, raising one hand rubbed it across his forehead and eyes. There was something in the gesture that silenced the young girl. She thought he felt tired and lost keen talking too much and that was pitifully conscious of her laughter and loquacity.

They sat without speaking for some moments. Dominick made no attempt to break the silence when Rose stirred noiselessly to the stove and poked in more wood. His face was turned from her and she thought he had fallen asleep when he suddenly moved and said:

"Isn't it strange that I have never met you before?"

She was relieved. His tone showed neither feebleness nor fatigue, but as it had the fresh alertness of a return to conversation. She determined, however, to be less talkative, less encouraging to the weakening exertions of general conversation, if she spoke with demure brevity.

"Yes, very. But you were at college for four years, and the year you came back I was in Europe."

He looked at her ruminatingly, and nodded.

"But I've seen you," he said, "at the theater. I was too sick at first to recognize you, but afterward I have often seen you, with your father and your brother Gene."

It was her turn to nod. She thought it best to say nothing, and waited. But his eyes been thoughtful upon her, and the waiting silence seemed to demand a comment. She made the first one that occurred to her:

"Whom were you in with?"

"My wife," said the young man.

She murmured a vague sentence of comment and this time determined not to speak, no matter how embarrassing the pause became. She even thought of taking up her book and was about to stretch her head for it, when he said:

"But it seems so queer when our parents have been friends for years, and I knew Gene, and you know my sister Cornelia so well."

She drew her hand back and leaned forward, frowning and staring in front of her, as she sent her memory back ward groping for data.

"Well, you see a sort of series of events prevented it. When we were little our parents lived in different places. Ages ago when we first came down from Virginia City you were living somewhere else, in Sacramento, wasn't it? Then you were at school and after that you went East to college for four years, and when you got back from college I was to Europe. And when I came back from Europe—that's over two years ago now—will then—"

She had again brought up against his marriage, this time with a shock that was somewhat of a shattering nature.

"Why, then," she repeated falteringly, realizing where she was—"why then—let's see—"

"Then I had married," he said quietly.

"Oh, yes, of course," she assented, trying to impart a suggestion of sudden innocent remembrance to her tone. "You had married. Why, of course."

An hour later when the doctor came back she was kneeling on the floor by the open stove door, softly building up the fire. At the sound of the opening door she looked up quickly, and her hands being occupied, gave a silencing jerk of her head toward the sleeping man.

The doctor looked at them both. She was like a picture of some primitive domestic interior where youth and beauty had made a nest, warmed by that symbol of life, a fire, which one replenished while the other slept.

CHAPTER VI.

In Which Berny Writes a Letter.

The morning after the quarrel Bernice woke late. She had not fallen asleep till the night was well spent, the heated seething of her rage keeping the peace of repose far from her. It was only as the dawn paled the square of the window that she fell into a heavy slumber, disturbed by dreams full of stress and strife.

She looked up at the clock; it was nearly ten. Dominick would have left for the bank before this, so the wretched constraint of a meeting with him was postponed. Restive and heavy-eyed, her head aching, oppressed by a sense of the unbearable unpleasantness of the situation, she threw on her wrapper, and going to the window drew the curtain and looked out.

The bedroom had but one window, wedged into an angle of wall, and affording a glimpse of the green lawn and clipped rose trees of the house next door. There was a fog that morning and even this curtailed prospect was invisible. She stood yawning drearily, and gazing out with eyes to which her raves had brought tears. Her hair made a red mist around her head, her face looked pinched and old. She was one of those women whose good looks are dependent on sunshine and sunlight. In this dim city of inward thought, neobserved in unbecoming disarray, one could realize that she had attained in those four years she could as successfully destroy under the ruinousing influences of full dress and high spirits.

During her toilet her thoughts returned to leave the subject of last night's quarrel. She and her husband had had disagreements before, but in the last year when they had virtually separated, though the world did not know it—but nothing so ignominiously squalid as the quarrel that evening had yet degraded their companionship. Bernice was ashamed. In the grey light of the dim, disturbed morning she realized that she had gone too far. She knew Dandy sick to be long-suffering, she knew that the hold he had upon him was a powerful one, but the most patient creatures sometimes rebel, the most compelling causes of lesser would sometimes break under too severe a strain. As she trifled down the long passages to the dining-room she made up her mind to be conciliatory, to swallow the hurt overture toward reconciliation that evening. It would be difficult but she could do it.

She was speculating as to how she could begin, to what manner she would greet him when he came home, when her eyes fell on the folded sheet against the clock Apprehension clutched her as she opened it. The note was undated, Dominick, as in fact he often did in his letters to her. He had gone—where? She turned the note over, looking at the back, to a sudden tremble of fearfulness. He had never done anything like this before, left her, suddenly cut loose from her in proud disgust. She read the note, and dropping the paper, her face fallen into scared bewilderment, the artificial hopefulness that she had been fostering since she awoke giving place to a down-drop into an abyss of alarm.

The door into the kitchen creaked and Mrs. Brown appeared with the second part of the dainty breakfast cooked especially for her.

"What time did Mr. Ryan leave this morning?" she said without turning, throwing the question over her shoulder.

"I dunno," the man returned, with the expressionless brevity of his race particularly noticeable in the West, "as he did not like his mistress. "His car was ready at nine here. He no stay here last night."

She faced round on him, her eyes full of a wrath that was dismay which marked them in moments of severe stress.

"Wasn't here last night?" she demanded. "What do you mean?"

He looked at his dishes with careful precision, not troubling himself to look at her. "Didn't sleep in the same dry indifference.

He put down the last of the dishes. No one slept in his bed. I go make bed—all right, Mrs. Ryan, I go make bed."

His work being accomplished he turned without more words and passed into the kitchen. Berny stood for a moment thinking, then, with a shrug of defiance, left the bewildered cakes untasted and walked into the hall. She went down the hall and entered the library, and looked about with sharp glances. She opened drawers and peered into the wardrobe. She was a woman who had a curiously keen memory for small domestic details, and a few moments' investigation proved to her that the things missing—the fifth of the oldest clothes, but had left behind all the better ones, and that the best of all was the dress-suit. Satisfied with relics of the days when he had been the brilliant star of his parents—locked room of its contents.

More alarmed than she had been in the course of her married life she left the room and passed up the hall to try on the fog-drenched street without; her figure motionless.

Then the curious rigidity of body concealed an intense inward energy of thought. It suddenly appeared to her as if her hold on Dominick, which till yesterday had seemed so strong and secure, by death could break it, was weak, was nothing. It had been rooted in his sense of honor, the sense that she fostered in him and by means of which she had been able to make him marry her. Was the sense not so powerful as she believed, dreadful thought!—was it weakening under the friction of their life together? Had she played on it too much and worn it out? She had been so sure of Dominick, so secure in his blind, plodding devotion to his duty! She had secretly considered it as a queer characteristic that it was fortunate he possessed. Deep in her heart she had a slight, amused contempt for it, a contempt that had extended to other things. She had felt it for him in those early days of their marriage when he had looked forward to children and wanted to live quietly, without society, in his own home. It grew stronger later when she realized he had accepted exclusion from his world and was too proud to ask his mother for money.

And now! Suppose he had gone back to his people! A low stumbling-block escaped her, and she dropped the curtain and pressed her hand, clenched for the hardness of a stone, against her breast.

The horrible thought of such a thing was intolerable. She did not see how she could support the loss of both husband and sister standing him from her. She hated them. They were the ones who had wrecked her, who had excluded her from the home had the wishes and the position that her marriage should have given her. Her retaliation had been her unwavering grip on Dominick and the careful discretion with which she had comported herself as his wife. There was no ground of complaint against her. She had been a quiet, home-keeping and dutiful a woman as any in California. She had been a good housekeeper, a skillful manager of her husband's small means. It was only within the last year that she had, in angry spite, run into the debts with which she had reasoned him. No wife could have lived more rigorously up to the letter of her marriage contract. It was easy for her to do it. She was not a woman whom light living and license attracted. She had comforted her honor in the Dominick, grudgingly, unwillingly, as close-fisted man part with money in the hope of rich returns. She did not want to be his mistress, but she knew of no other means by which she could reach the position of his wife.

Now suppose he had gone back to his people! It was an insupportable, maddening thought. It plunged her into agitation that made her rise and move about the room with an aimless restlessness, like some self-tested fretful animal. Suppose he had gone home and told them about last night, how they had prevailed upon him not to come back!

Worst of they had, hers was still the strong position. The sympathy of the disinterested outsider would always be with her. If she had been quarrelsome and ugly, those were unpardonable sins. In the great essentials she had not failed. Suppose she and Rose were going home to an open cressing of swords, would not her story be the story of the two? The world's generosity would certainly not go to the rich women, trampling on the poor little typewriter; the hard-working girl, who for sen'ality, righted by subsequent marriage, had been the object of their implacable antagonism and persecution.

She said this opposite the mirror, extending her hands as she had even in her success do in a secret play. As she saw her pointed, pale face, her expression of worry gave way to one of pleased complacence. She looked pathetic, and her position was pathetic. Who would have the heart to condemn her when they saw her and heard her story? A slight spirit in its began to rise. With the first gleam of returning confidence she shook off her apprehensions. A struggle of sensibles pierced the fog, and going to the window she drew the curtains and looked out on the veil of mist every moment growing brighter and thinner. The sun finally pierced it, a patch of blue came above, and peeping the curtains she turned and looked at the clock. It was after eleven. She decided she would go out and take lunch with her sisters, who were always ready to listen and to sympathize with her.

These sisters were the only intimate friends and companions Bernice had, their home the one home to which she was a constant visitor. With all her peculiarities and faults she possessed a strong sense of kin. In her rise to fairer fortune, if not greater happiness, her old home had never been the hold upon her, nor had she weakened to a sort of cross-grained, patronizing sympathy to her two sisters. This may have been accounted for by the fact that they were exceedingly amiable and affectionate, proud to regard Bernice as the flower of the family, whose dizzy translation to unexpected heights they had watched with unanimous admiration.

Hannah, the oldest of the family, was the daughter of a first marriage. She was now a spinster of forty-five, and had taught school for twenty years. Hasel was the youngest of the three, she and Bernice having been the offspring of Danny Iverson's second alliance with a woman of romantic tendencies, which had no way of expressing themselves except in the naming of her children. Hasel, while yet in her teens, had married a clerk in a jewelry store, called Josh McCrae. It had been a happy marriage. After the birth of a daughter, Hasel had returned to her work as saleslady in a fashionable shop. Both she and Josh, and the child, had continued to live together in domestic harmony, in the house which Hannah, with the savings of a quarter of a century and finally cleared by her spouse's death, now owned. Nb household could have been more simply decent and honest; no family more unsuprizingly content. In such an environment Bernice, with her daring ambitions and bold unscrupulousness, was like that unaccounted-for blossom which in the floral world is known as a "sport."

But it did not appear that she regarded herself as such. With the exception of a European trip to Los Angeles and Chicago she had been a member of the family since her childhood till the day of her marriage. The year of absence had been the result of a sudden, unaccountable, elaborate monotony of life and surroundings, an upwelling of the restless ambitions that preyed upon her. A good position had been offered her in Los Angeles and she had accepted it with eagerness, thankful for the opportunity to see the world in break away, as she said, from the dullness of her circumscribed, the narrowness of her circle. The spirit of adventure carried her farther afield, and she had remained in Nfr across the continent as Chicago, where she was employed in one of the most prosperous business houses, earning a large salary. But, like many Californians, homesickness assailed her, and before the year was out she was back, unrebuked and fresh, the eastern manners, character, and climate, and glad to be home among her own in the family nest. Her sisters were satisfied with her account of her wanderings, and Hannah, who had spent much of an adept at telling half a story as she was at telling half a fiction in typewriting. She was too proud to tell them the truth. They were altogether too simple to suspect her apparent frankness.

Hannah and Hasel who remained at home until her marriage. Her liaison with Dominick was conducted with the utmost secrecy. Her sisters had not a suspicion of it. Now nothing but that the young man was attracted to her, till she told them of her approaching marriage, which took place in the parlor at Hannah's home, and the amazed sisters, hastily called to Berny's glories, had waited to see her start down the inner depths of fashion and wealth with a flare of diamonds on her head and ropes of pearls about her neck. Since then the tiara was forthcoming, no pearls graced her bridal dress, and as she crossed over the threshold of her door, seemed to the brief Hannah and Hasel the most unmerited and inexplicable injustice that had ever come within their experience.

It took Bernice some time to dress, for she attached the greatest importance to all matters of personal adornment, and the lunch hour was in hand when she alighted from the Hyde Street car and walked down the hill to Hasel's home. It was one of those streets which cross Hyde near the slope of Russian Hill, and are devoted to the habitats of small, thrifty householders. A stately, bright cleanliness is the prevailing characteristic of the neighborhood, and Hasel's sidewalks always swept, the houses standing back in tiny squares of garden, clipped and trimmed in the severe shortness of grass and straightness of border. The sun was now broadly out and the fron each other, severely isolated in the corners, as though the room were a public one, and refused even to suggest the cheerful amenities of social intercourse. Hasel's daughter, Josh's child, was a pretty little girl of seven, with a mop of red hair and a pert, impudent face. She had been married here, in the bay-window, under a wedding bell of white roses. The musty smell brought it all back, even her sense of almost breathless elation when the deed was set on her darling schemes.

From beyond the folding doors a sound, of conversation and emitted cookery arose, also a strong odor of cooking. The family were already at lunch, and opening the door Berny stepped into the midday meal which was being partaken of by her two sisters, Josh, and Hasel's daughter, Pearl, a pretty child of eight.

Neither of her sisters resembled her in the least. Hannah was a woman who looked more than her age, with a large, calm face, and gentle, near sighted eyes which blinked at the world behind a pair of steel-framed glasses. Her quarter-century of school work had not dried or stiffened her. She was fuller of the milk of human kindness, of the blandishments of sweetness and light, than either of her sisters. All the love of her kindly, maternal nature was given to Pearl, whom she was bringing up carefully to be what seemed to Hannah best to woman.

Hasel was very pretty still, with rosy cheeks and fine dress, even bloom of a Californian woman, a round, graceful figure, and dark hair that rippled and arranged in an elaborate coiffure at the back of her head by a dresser. She could do this herself as she could make her clothes, but Josh, a fair salary at the millinery, and sing to the guitar to a small, piping voice. He was a man who believed in her good looks and accomplishments, and thought her the most wonderful woman in the world. He was a thin, tall, young man with abstracted gestures, a long, lean neck, and an amiable, insignificant face. But he seemed quite happy, who had married him when she was nineteen, before there was any nightmare thought that if she did not take what chanced offered, she might become an old maid like Hannah.

Berny sat down next to the child, conscious under the pleasant friendliness of their greetings a vivid curiosity as to whether they had been to the ball burned in each breast. She had never met the sisters of going with them, and Hasel, whose taste in dress was generally excellent, had helped her order the dress. Now, drawing her plate toward her and shelling a hard-boiled egg, she began to eat her lunch, at once too sore and too peckish to begin the subject. The others endured their condition of ignorance for some minutes, and then Hasel, finding that to wait was useless, approached the vital topic.

"Well, Berny, we've been looking for you the last few days, and I read the morning papers and your name don't seem to be there."

"I don't see why it should," said Berny without looking up, "considering I wasn't there."

"You weren't there!" ejaculated Hasel. "Then what didn't ask you?"

"That's right," said Berny, breaking a piece of bread. "They didn't ask me."

"Well, I'll be jiggered!" exclaimed Josh. "That's beating the Dutch!"

"I didn't believe Mrs. Ryan would do that," said Hannah, who could not be generally charvear eye took no note of the fact that Pearl was pulling her fingers in her plate. "You're as good as her own flesh and blood, Bernice—her own sister's, for that matter, and I don't understand it."

"Isn't tough," said Josh, "that's what it is, tough!"

"If I were you," said Hasel with spirit, "husband or no husband, I'd never want to go inside that house or have any dealings with that crowd again. If they were down on their knees to me I'd never go near them. Just think what it would be if Josh's mother thought herself too good to know me! I'd like to know what I'd feel about it."

"But she wouldn't, dearie," said Josh placatingly. "She'd be proud to have yon related to her."

"I guess she'd hatter be," said Hasel, flaring an indignant glare on her spouse. "She'd find she'd harked up the wrong tree if she tried it, that's all."

Considering that Josh's mother had been dead for twelve years and in her lifetime had been a meek and unassuming woman who let lodgings, Hasel's proud repudiation at her possible scorn seemed a profitless wasting of fires, and Josh with himself turned the conversation back to the ball.

"Perhaps they did send you an invitation," he said to Berny, "and it got lost in the mails. That does happen, you know."

Berny's cheeks, under the faint bloom of rouge that covered them, flamed a sudden, dusky red. She had never been open with these simple relatives of hers and she was not going to begin now. But she felt shame as she thought of Dominick's humiliating quest for the invitation that was refused.

"Oh, no," she said hurriedly. "It wasn't sent, that's all. Mrs. Ryan would have me in the house. That's the fact and there's no use trying to get around it. Well, she can do without me. I seem able to support my existence without her."

Her tone and manner, marked by a sort of hard bravado, did not deceive the simple, who had had extreme naivete in expressing their intimate opinions which is peculiar to the Scandinavian. They looked at her with compassionate sympathy, not quite comprehending her attitude of independence, but feeling sorry for her, what her pose she adopted.

"And your dress," said Hasel, "what will you do with that? When will you ever wear it—a regular ball dress like that?"

"You could put a gulmpe in and have sleeves to the elbow and wear it to church," said Josh, with a view to plumes it would be a dead swell concert dress. And if you sat any of the boys ans they'd see you were holding up your end of the family and not ready yet to go to the almshouse."

Hannah shook her head.

Why the Football Squad Laughed.

Those who were there when this incident happened will remember it many ago never tire of telling the following yarn on J. T. Cammack, assistant superintendent of schools:

Professor Cammack was vice principal of the Central high school in 1909 or thereabouts and the athletic movement had led to the formation of a football squad. The ambitious were out in force on the field on a Saturday afternoon, where Professor Cammack addressed them after this fashion:

"I am glad to see you boys here and pleased to believe that you are taking an interest in athletics. I think it is the thing to be interested in healthful sports. Football will give you confidence. We need boys and men of confidence in this country. And what I want in make confidence men out of all of you."

LIKES TROPICAL LIFE

Traveler in Central America Tells of Wonderful Climate.

Visitor to Costa Rica Declares Weather Is Perfect in the Dry Season—Says One Hardly Ever Gets Wet—Would Never End.

San Jose, Costa Rica.—A traveler in Central America writing to friends here wonders why more Americans don't visit the tropics just for the intoxication of the climate, the New York Times states. Few people thought of the tropics as having any such effect as that, apart from the native beverages, but he gives assurance that there is nothing like the effect anywhere else than the tropics there produces at times. He says in his letter upon leaving San Jose, Costa Rica, to journey on:

"There is less rain during the year and in the dry season there is really no rain at all, so that if one travels

after the middle of December, say, and before the end of March, the luxury of highland weather is felt in all its fullness.

"The train leaves the city a few minutes after eight in the morning—rather late for a tropic schedule—but there is no need of hurry to escape the glare and heat of midday. The climate is perfect and the clear mellow air one wish that the day would never end. This is often one of the great cruel fair absence from home and the so-called comforts of modern life, the absolute perfection of sunshine, sky and scenery in the tropics.

"Indolence is the word to describe the feeling; I do not get lazy, for the instant a demand comes for action I am ready for it. But the delicious feeling creeps into my bones and time has stopped and that physical contentment is the nirvana of eternity. I know of few places in the United States where the climate is so overwhelming as it is in many places in the mountainous regions of Central America and Mexico. Perhaps in Tennessee or the highest levels of Kansas, for the short weeks of spring, I have experienced the intoxication of climate, but California, Florida or Illinois don't know the force of the word. There is possibly a little change of season and one feels that one must grasp it before it escapes; in Central America, even in the rainy season, the storm is welcome and to be perpetued. Just to live is sufficient reason for living."

Aside from the delights of the climate he finds other things to interest him among others that of work, the waiting until tomorrow. He doesn't hold to the "mañana" habit, meaning the thing to do everything today, as Americans do. He says further:

"It is necessary to cultivate patience. Let me drop the old joke of mañana: there is a time and place in life in putting off many things till tomorrow and that is why I never get in a hurry what can better be done in day after. But not to-day. I am not ready yet to go to the almshouse. Hannah shook her head.

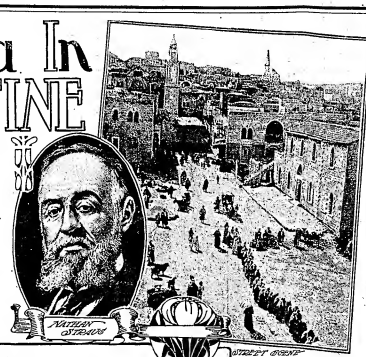
ASKS GOTHAM POLICEWOMEN

Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont of New York Says They Could Curb Traffic Evils.

New York—Policewomen would aid in stamping out vice in New York, Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont told the legislative committee investigating police conditions. "The appalling increasing traffic in girls," in Mrs. Belmont's opinion, was sufficient reason why policewomen should be done to regulate the disreputable resorts. Mrs. Belmont declared that "men, no matter how worthy and upright they are, are not qualified to deal with delinquent girls without the help of women."

Former Police Commissioner Bingham said various associations in the department could be disbanded. One organization, he declared, raised $60,000 one year while he was commissioner to defeat legislation which he favored, but which his subordinates "bibled against.

New Era In PALESTINE



PHILANTHROPIC work of a new sort which has been instituted in Palestine through the generosity of Nathan Straus has reached such proportions that Mr. Straus is now in that country on a special mission to see how he can further and enlarge the humanitarian projects to which he began to devote attention last year. He will spend some time in a comprehensive study of the needs and possibilities of the two charitable enterprises he has already established and in directing the formation of still a third, of which he has the highest hope.

The institutions which are already in existence through Mr. Straus's activities are known as the Nathan Straus Relief Fund and the Health Bureau. The first operates exclusively among the poor of Jerusalem, while the second extends over all of Palestine and concerns some 600,000 persons. Now he proposes to introduce the system which has been so successfully employed here of providing trained nurses to disseminate hygienic knowledge in districts where modern methods have hitherto been unknown and to teach medical principles so that the ignorance of the people in regard to such subjects may be dispelled.

In this way he hopes to supplement the equipment with which for the past year he has been fighting disease and to secure the employment of modern ideas in a campaign for health and the rout of disease-breeding habits. Under his direction the first steps have been taken that the dwellers in the city of Jerusalem and the surrounding country have ever known for the relief of the conditions that have so long impeded the commercial and social progress of that portion of the Turkish empire.

Palestine had until Mr. Straus and some few various countries in most other quarters of the globe. Now it is proposed to do everything that money and energy can accomplish to push a program of enlightenment and relief there and so good a beginning has been made in the work of the existing movement that Mr. Straus has been inspired to take for the time being personal charge of affairs.

Details of the work that is being done in Palestine at the present time and of plans for the future are told by Dr. Aaron Aaronsohn, head of the Jewish agricultural experiment station, which is located near Jerusalem and which is conducted in conjunction with the health bureau started by Mr. Straus. Dr. Aaronsohn came to this country to report to the department of agriculture on the results of experiments in the breeding of "wild wheat," which is found in profusion in the farming sections of his native country. Since he has been here he has made an extended trip through California, Arizona and Texas at the request of the agricultural department to introduce and direct experiments with the wheat in those states.

It was directly through the discovery by Dr. Aaronsohn of wild wheat that the Jewish agricultural experiment station in Palestine was founded. He was born and brought up in that country, the son of a native farmer, and after receiving a medical education he came to his country to see what reception he would have for his theories that the cultivation and adoption of the wheat for commercial purposes would tend to cheapen foodstuffs and render unable many arid districts in the west where nothing would grow before. He was favorably received by the federal agricultural authorities and on his trip met the men who ultimately united to form the station of which he is now the head. Julius Rosenwald of Chicago is president of the board of directors of the station and members of it are Oscar Straus, Paul M. Warburg, Isaac N. Seligman and Jacob H. Schiff. The late Judge Straus was also affiliated with the organization, as also is Nathan Straus.

With a plan for the industrial betterment of Palestine and its inhabitants under way, naturally it became necessary to do something for the physical alleviation of the people themselves, since it had been found that progress in the one to the work were an indispensable requirement. The rate of mortality in the country was very high and the general health of so low a standard that it soon became evident that something must be done to improve conditions if the agricultural movement was to be a success.

At the time the need became most evident, something more than a year ago, Nathan Straus was in Palestine on a pleasure trip. He was appealed to, but at first declined to do anything in that country, as he thought his first duty, from a humanitarian standpoint, was to the poor and the suffering of the United States. He consented, however, to investigate the situation personally and soon became so impressed with the conditions that he assured those who had made the appeal that he would do all in his power to relieve them and would also solicit the aid of his numerous friends. Since then his efforts have been unremitting and such improvements have been introduced that Palestine's second city of Jerusalem in particular have become modernized from a hygienic point of view to an extent that was not dreamed of a few years ago.

It was not only because of his personal experience that Mr. Straus determined to lend his aid in Palestine. He believes that all members of the Jewish race owe a peculiar duty and obligation to that country and that wherever feasible no effort should be spared to civilize and bring it to a condition of hygiene fit to bear comparison with any other community in the civilized world.

No sooner had Mr. Straus seen with his own eyes the pitiful and squalid conditions to Palestine that so sadly needed relief than he, with the decisive and generously characteristic of him, took immediate steps to correct them. With the expenditure of both time and a great deal of money he devoted himself to the object, with a result that has now far exceeded even the most sanguine expectations.

The first thing he did was to start the Nathan Straus Relief Fund, of which he is the sole supporter. Discovering that great numbers of the aged and infirm of Jerusalem were without means of support and were frequently on the throes of starvation because there was no organized means of relief in the city, he started two soup kitchens. This was a year ago and since that time the institutions have been working night and day with great results.

Each day from 600 to 800 men and women and children are fed at those kitchens and the food they receive there is about the only subsistence they get secure. No lines are drawn and persons of all religions are entitled to the aid.

But Mr. Straus was not satisfied with the soup kitchens. They were a remedy for a disease, but he sought a preventive for the ailment that was producing vagrants and beggars in the Holy City. His investigation disclosed the fact that many of the young men and young women were never trained to support themselves in any way and were virtually dependents from childhood on. So he decided to educate them in some useful occupation which would prevent them from becoming paupers in old age and would make them creditable citizens.

One of the principal businesses of Jerusalem is the selling of small objects of art and other souvenirs to the throng of tourists that flock to the city every year. Seeing something to be gained in this, Mr. Straus hired skilled artisans, erected buildings which were fitted with proper machinery and started an industrial school for the manufacture of the salable souvenirs of Jerusalem. This venture proved an immediate success and the institution is crowded with the previously neglected youths, who have shown not only a willingness but a distinct desire to learn some rich useful and lucrative occupation. The souvenirs that used to come from the larger cities of that part of the country, and some even from the continent and America, are now produced right on the ground. The workers get the proceeds of their labor and the undertaking bids fair to be to time one of the biggest and most successful of the kind in the world.

At about the time of the establishment of the relief fund Mr. Straus's sympathies were so strongly aroused by the unfortunate situation in which he found a great majority of the inhabitants in regard to hygienic precautions that he determined to do something in that direction. Dr. Aaronsohn and other officials of the agricultural station were delighted with the decision and labored with him to effect his purpose. Such things as sanitation, the scientific battling with disease, proper drainage and even the use of such simple health expedients as soap and water were almost unknown to people in Palestine. Year in and year out hundreds of them had been dying solely because of this ignorance of the most elementary principles of hygiene. Mr. Straus set about a campaign of education.

The result of this situation was the health bureau, perhaps the most unusual institution of its kind in the world. With funds furnished by Mr. Straus some empty buildings were secured and an experienced physician found to take charge of it. He is the only medical laboratory in all Palestine. With this as a basis the work has been expanded from Jerusalem, where it was started, to every part of the country. Now it is firmly established and growing every day. Money for its continuance is furnished by Mr. Straus and great interest is taken in the work by the Americans who were responsible for the establishment of the agricultural station.

The physician in charge of the bureau is Dr. Bruno, a twenty-eight-year-old graduate of the University of Berlin, who had done work in the German colonies in central Africa and had settled in Jerusalem. He was recommended to Mr. Straus by Dr. Aaronsohn, and to his hands was placed the organization of the enterprise. The equipment for the laboratory was imported from Germany at considerable cost and is of the most modern kind, suitable for chemical analyses and examinations necessary in the determination of the nature of disease.

Dr. Bruno became acquainted with Mr. Straus when the latter was there on his trip and he was about to return to this country last spring. The doctor accompanied the philanthropist from Jaffa to Palestine to Naples, reaching there just about the time of the Blanche disaster, in which Isidor Straus lost his life. Nathan Straus's condition was made more serious by this loss and the young physician stayed with him until he was able to sail for America. That cemented a friendship and gave Mr. Straus the utmost confidence in the success of the bureau.

Returning from Naples to Jerusalem, Dr. Bruno set about the still further extension of the plan. The bureau is modeled as closely as possible upon the board of health of New York, the reports of which are sent to Palestine and information in regard to which has been liberally furnished by the officials here. Dr. Bruno has been in this country, but is planning a trip here in the near future to study local health regulation at close range. Dr. Aaronsohn says that the work of the bureau's chief has been most remarkable and praiseworthy in every way.

At the present time Dr. Bruno has two young doctors assisting him and when a report is not possible to do any actual hospital work, but methods of checking and preventing disease are taught all through the country.

Whenever an epidemic starts a temporary camp is established at the point and the health bureau physicians in charge, and the people affected are directed in their fight against the trouble. In one settlement of sixty persons it was found that 150 days of illness had been the average each month. In one year this average had been cut down to four days, an accomplishment which has been characteristic of the work in every place where it has been put into operation.

Not only does the bureau educate in preventive methods but the physicians, or the nurses where able, treat afflicted persons, and, best of all, distribute medicines free of charge. Malarial fever has long been the scourge of Palestine, but the fight against this has been carried on to two times by the physicians and nurses of the bureau. The bureau experts have shown the natives how to get rid of the disease germs and have also introduced pools and the marshy grounds, sometimes by the simple application of a few shovelfuls of dirt. They have used modern methods in fighting the plague of mosquitoes, the germ carriers, and those where the disease has already existed they have introduced quinine.

Dr. Aaronsohn says that the Bedouin sleigh to see a fine in front of the dispensary in which could be found not only natives of the country but groups of Americans for many days have been attracted by reports of the marvelous work of the white doctors.

The fight against the mosquito, which abounds in Palestine, is one of the most interesting features of the work of the bureau. Dr. Bruno and his assistants have studied the methods used in this country, particularly in the state of New Jersey, and have adopted them to the situation in the Holy Land. Kerosene is poured in the pools where the insects breed and every other scientific weapon employed against the pest.

With all this charity and benevolence among them, after so many years of neglect, the people of Palestine are taking kindly to it. They have been a downtrodden and discouraged race and are now hopeful and cheerful. They are with their moral and physical welfare goes their industrial welfare. Butterfly of one means improvement of the other, and both are on the forward march. There is a new era in the Holy Land.

J. PIERPONT MORGAN SUCCUMBS AT ROME

Decline Traced to Money Trust Investigation.

Financier Dies in Italy at 12:05 P. M., Monday, After Week of Serious Illness—Had Been Unconscious and Failed to Recognize His Relatives.

New York, April 1.—J. Pierpont Morgan is dead. He died at 12:05 p. m., Rome time, Monday. This announcement was made by the offices of J. P. Morgan & Co. a few hours after the great financier's demise.

Mr. Morgan died at the Grand hotel, Rome. Announcement of the death was not made, to the waiting newspaperroe for some time after the end came, the information being held up until private cables could be sent to the London and New York houses of the Morgan firm.

End Comes Peacefully.

The end came peacefully, while Morgan was still unconscious. Herbert L. Satterlee, Mrs. Satterlee, daughter of the financier; Professor Bastianelli, Drs. Starr and Dixon and other members of the Morgan party were at the bedside, but for hours before his death the banker gave no sign of consciousness.

Mr. Morgan's illness began while he was on a trip on the Nile.

Henry P. Davidson, a member of the house of Morgan, who made the first announcement concerning the death, said merely that he had received a cable that the financier had passed away shortly after noon. Mr. Davidson had planned to go abroad once more, but it is thought probable that this trip will be postponed.

In Bad Health Here.

Coincident with Mr. Morgan's death it became known that he had suffered a serious attack before his departure for Europe, but rallied so rapidly that it was considered a forerunner to fatal illness, and was known only to his most intimate friends.

For many years Mr. Morgne spent a considerable portion of his time abroad, on this trip the first time he severed all connection with business affairs and permitted his partners to shoulder all responsibility for their conduct. It was the first instance of his taking such a complete rest since he had entered the banking business in this city before the civil war.

Will Not Affect Market.

Prominent bankers in this city said that they did not expect any decided unfavorable effect on the stock market because of Mr. Morgan's death. The reason of this they explained was because of recurrent rumors of his serious illness had prepared the market for any possibility and enabled those interested in financial affairs to prepare for just such a situation.

The condition of J. Pierpont Morgan was serious at 10:45. Ha seemed to have lost consciousness and did not recognize his son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert L. Satterlee.

Unable to Talk.

The financier was unable to answer questions even with signs. Drs. M. Allen Starr and George A. Dixon, and Professor Giuseppe Bastianelli visited Mr. Morgan for over an hour in the morning, examining all his organs carefully. Artificial food was administered in the afternoon and evening.

It was announced to have become impossible to feed the patient, while to assimilate the artificial nourishment administered earlier in the morning. His pulse had become more rapid and his temperature was rising.

Dangerous Symptoms.

It was said by his attendants that the financier's pulse and the high fever temperature indicated some affection of the heart, which was detected by the physicians or had been kept secret by them. At a quarter to twelve Mr. Morgan was in a state of coma.

The physicians in attendance on Mr. Morgan issued the following bulletin at the Hotel Grand:

"Mr. Morgan has failed very rapidly since Sunday. He is unconscious. His temperature is 104.5, his pulse 140 and his respiration 48.

"The question of his death is only one of hours.

Money Trust Probe Cause.

Dr. M. Allen Starr of New York, called into consultation with Professor Bastianelli, attributed the financier's illness to the nervous strain caused by the investigation carried on by the Pujo committee of the investigation into the operations of the "money trust."

Half Century a Banker.

No man of recent times has occupied a bigger place in American financial affairs than J. Pierpont Morgan. His was in the banking business for more than half a century, and during the latter years of his life he was undoubtedly the financial dictator of the United States.

When a panic seized Wall street in 1901, during a struggle for the control of the Northern Pacific railroad, it was Mr. Morgan who came to the rescue. Again, when similar conditions prevailed in the fall of 1907, it was Mr. Morgan who saved the situation.

Aside from these two incidents Mr. Morgan probably will be chiefly remembered for the part he took in floating the United States Steel corporation. The violent decline to the securities of the steel trust during the depression of 1903-04, and the storm of criticism that broke forth from the thousands of investors in the United States and to Europe who put their money into these securities, had been a thorn in Mr. Morgan's side, and his chief ambition in the years that followed was to see the Steel securities to such position in the market that his most bitter critics would be forced to concede that he built the great trust on a substantial foundation.

Some of His Accomplishments.

As an example of business capacity of a remarkable kind, Mr. Morgan was without a parallel. He was as capable as any of the Rockefellers in the money line, and his achievements as an industrial organizer surpassed by far similar feats performed by any operators in the United States or abroad.

Among the concrete results of Mr. Morgan's intellectual labors were a Reorganization of the Buffalo, West Shore and its leans to the New York Central.

Reorganization of the Chesapeake & Ohio.

Rearrangement of the Great Northern.

Reorganization of the Erie, and his the extension of the Northern Pacific railroad to the Pacific coast. In the same year he was instrumental in the reorganization of the Reading railroad and the Baltimore & Ohio, involving the loan of $10,000,000.

In 1893 the Southern railway was created out of the Richmond Terminal and allied lines. In 1895 he rehabilitated the Erie road.

Two years later he put the Lehigh Valley on its feet and brought about the soft coal combination.

In 1892 he performed one of his most remarkable feats. In company with August Belmont he undertook to and did maintain the gold reserve in the federal treasury, although he performed the impossible, the suspending of the laws of exchange in order to accomplish the result.

Gave Much to Charity.

Despite a life of strenuous endeavor Mr. Morgan found time for other things. He gave away millions in charity, but nothing perturbed him more than to have it mentioned to him. He was a devout Episcopalian and vestryman of St. George's Episcopal church, where he could be seen any Sunday morning when at home, passing the silver salver for the collection.

He took an active interest in the Metropolitan Museum of Art, and possessed one of the most magnificent private gallaries in the world. A deep student of ancient history, he collected many relics of the past, including a Bible for which he paid three thousand dollars, while at one time he bought a cupe which was stolen from Italy and when the news of the theft leaked out showed his magnificent heritage by refusing to the original owners free of cost.

Fortune Estimated at $200,000,000.

During all his years Mr. Morgan enjoyed life to the utmost. He was fond of amusements and pastimes. He won over the wonder of breeders the world over. His rods and shot and angled enthusiastically and was fond of yachting. His yacht Corsair was one of the favorite craft of clubs and clubs in the United States and Europe.

It is impossible to estimate with any degree of accuracy the size of the Morgan fortune. It has been variously estimated in recent years at from $75,000,000 to $200,000,000. If it it anywhere near the latter figure, it is equally true that ha made as much for others.

In 1861 Mr. Morgan married Miss Amelia Sturges, who died the following year. In 1865 he married Frances Louise Tracy, by whom he had one son and three daughters. The son, J. P. Morgan, Jr., is now a man of middle life, and for a number of years has been the active head of the Morgan banking house in New York.

Old Bridal Pair

A wedding at Wolborough, England, between a couple whose ages are respectively seventy-five and seventy, suggests the question of the greatest age at which men and women have married. An entry in the parish register at Greenwich records like the record, for it tells how in 1686 John Cooper, aged one hundred and eight, wed Margaret Thomas, a sprinkster of eighty. After this it is not surprising to find the death of "Ould Cooper" recorded the following year. Greenwich has claim another elderly bridegroom in William Keith Ball, who was born there in 1788, and did not marry until 1870.

One Day's Kill.

A wall-to-do family spent a day recently motoring in the country. Before they reached home their luggage had been augmented by four chickens, two ducks, a lamb and one small pig, all killed.

"They were run over by our machine," said the motorist, "in every case the owner of the fowls and live stock held us up and demanded excessive payment for his property. We paid, and, since we had acquired the chickens and other things by right of purchase, we brought them home."

"What are you going to do with them?" asked a visitor.

"I haven't the slightest idea," said the man, "but I'm not the fellow to pay for a thing and throw the fellow bought it from the use of it, save it I have to throw somebody else to take it off my hands."

SCHOOLS TO BE DYNAMITED?

Prediction by Fortuna Teller Keeps Children From Attending Institution at Du Bois, Pa.

Du Bois, Pa.—A warning that are said school buildings are to be dynamited and others destroyed by fire has caused alarm among the children and their parents. The schools are being attended by pupils behind the registrants and the enrollment is dropping rapidly. School officials visited the gamecock houses in an effort to allay the fears of the children, but without success. A "fortuna teller" is said to have made the prediction.

Gamecock Attacks Jersey Farmer.

Jersey City.—When Benjamin Sherman, a farmer living near Glen Gardner passed through his barnyard with a basket of eggs, Rodney, one of his gamecocks, attacked and spurred him so badly that he was almost blinded. He was finally secured.

THE PROFFER OF THE POET.

IN my study, listless, weary, on I pondered, all forlorn,
Over piles of useless verses I had penned since years gone by,
As I sat serenely rocking, thinking I must take to "rocking."
Suddenly I heard a knocking, knocking at my study door.
"'Tis some creditor," I muttered, "knocking at my study door.
Only this, and nothing more!"

"Come," said I, in trepidation and with beads of perspiration
Literally oozing, oozing out of every pore,
And my knees clattered against actually took his station,
Shaking somewhat of vexation, just inside my study door.
With his bill, now over six months owing, just within my study door.
Merely called—called—and more.

"Man!" I cried, "of thread and needle, can't I pass between the wheels
You from dunning me pi generist as you've often done before?
I've the ailment of all purses, so from your slumber'd verses
Take your money out in verses, by instalments, I implore.
Won't you trust me any longer? Tell me cruly, I implore."
Quoth that tailor, "Nevermore!"
—Red Yorkibum.

Who Wanted Him.

Senator Tillman sees more with his one eye than many see do with two; nevertheless, those who see him cannot help noticing his misfortune. Some time ago he clapped his hands for a page from the cloakroom, and a new one responded.

"Tell Senator Clay," he said, "that I want to see him in the cloakroom."

The page ran on the errand, stopping to ask the head usher where Senator Clay sat. Then he asked, "Who has it that has only one eye?"

The usher, thinking it a question in mythology, replied, "Why, Cyclops, of course."

The page delivered his message in this astounding way: "Senator Cyclops wants to see you in the cloakroom."—New York American.

DIFFERENT.

How Prospective Widow Accounts For Sudden Change.

AN Irishman over the age of four score and ten who by strict economy had accumulated a moderate fortune and was about to die called in the parish priest and the family lawyer to make his last will and testament. The wife, a rather covetous old lady, was also in the room. The preliminaries of the will having been finished, it became necessary to inquire about the debts owing to the estate.

Among those were several of importance of which the old lady had been in ignorance, but was, nevertheless, pleased to find that as much ready money would be forthcoming after the funeral.

"Now, then," said the lawyer, "state explicitly the amount owed you by your friends."

"Timothy Brown," replied the old man, "owes me $250, John Carey owes me $150, and"—

"Good, good!" ejaculated the prospective widow. "Reduced to the last!"

"Luke Brown owes me $200," resumed the old man.

"Reduced to the last!" put in the eager old lady again.

"Pat Michael Liffey I owe $1,000."

"Ah," exclaimed the old woman, "now him owes!"—Irish Wit and Humor.

He Was Justly Suspicious.

A big mass meeting was being held in Bloomville.

The well groomed and slick looking individual who was trying to separate a town from its money arose to make a few remarks.

"Fellow citizens," he opened up, "sprouts"—

"One minute, mister," said a small, sandy whiskered man.

A look of annoyance crossed the speaker's face.

"What can I do for you?" he asked.

"I have here a packet edition of Webster's Dictionary, and I want to look up that word 'sprouts.' I don't intend to sit here and rot some silly tongued stranger slip one over on us," replied the sandy whiskered man.

"You are a little suspicious, I see," said the speaker. "Now, that word to which you refer means"—

"Never mind what it means," interrupted the little man. "I'm looking it up. I let a smooth talker sell me a bicycle one time. He said it was the last word in conveyance, and when I paid the freight on it from Chicago I found I had purchased a wheelbarrow."—Judge.

Bobby Was Observant.

The teacher was hearing the youths fill clues in mathematics.

"Now," she said, "in order to subtract, things have to be in the same denomination. For instance, we couldn't take three pears from four peaches, nor eight horses from ten cats. Do you understand?"

There was assent from the majority of pupils. One little boy in the rear raised a timid hand.

"Well, Bobby, what is it?" asked teacher.

"Please, teacher," said Bobby, "couldn't you take three quarts of milk from two cows?"—New York Post.

Explanation Demanded.

THE CAR THAT SELLS BY THE TRAIN LOAD

A Man Who Owns a Motor Car wants to know that he isn't going to find any roads that can stop him, or he does't have that snug feeling of security which makes driving a pleasure.

That's One Thing About a Buick that makes every one of those 110,000 Buick users a Buick booster. They know a Buick will take them anywhere and bring them back. Here's what a Flint man says:

"I have driven my model 29 something like 7,000 miles and barring a little $8.20 accident in skidding around a corner, it hasn't cost me a cent for repairs. I have just returned from a winter tour with my wife and son in Canada. We climbed along steep, mountainous roads as easily as most folks travel a boulevard. On one three mile hill, I found a car stalled, so I hooked on and towed it all the way up. It was the second car I gave a boost along the route. My Buick will go anywhere. And they're all alike.—MAY MCCABE.

Every Buick User Testifies to this same thing--economy and low cost of up-keep. No car on the market is maintained at as low a cost of up-keep as the Buick. Figures show that the entire consumption of Buick parts, figuring on the 110,000 Buick cars that have been built in the last nine years, average much less than $1.00 per car per month.

The Famous Buick Overhead Valve Motor is guaranteed to have more power and more speed than any other type of motor on the market. It will pull stronger on low grade gasoline than any other type of motor ever built and the fuel consumption is less. It has more power per cubic inch of piston displacement than any other type of motor ever built.

MAN NEARLY KILLED IN ENCOUNTER WITH HORSE

STALLION WITH "BRAINSTORM" ATTACKS MAN, BITING VICIOUSLY.

NAPOLEON CASSAVAN, THE VICTIM, TAKEN TO HOSPITAL. MAY NOT RECOVER.

One of the very yellow journals, if telling this story, would probably give it a four-story heading printed in at least four colors and reading something like this: "Enraged Stallion Tries to Eat Man Alive", and it would be almost literally true. The experience of Napoleon Cassavan of Dorothy is so unusual as to be almost unbelievable.

Mr. Cassavan was working in the field yesterday afternoon with a four-horse team, one of the horses being a stallion. The stallion got tangled up in the harness and Mr. Cassavan found it necessary to stop the team to release the horse. It was necessary to take the horse from the near chine to which he was hitched. When the stallion was released he made a dive for the man, biting viciously. The other horses ran away and Mr. Cassavan and the stallion engaged in a terrific "hand to hand" encounter. After the first charge by the horse Mr. Cassavan managed to get a knife and when the animal charge the horse knocked the knife from his hand and continued to bite viciously. The horse bit off the man's left ear, inflicting a wound three inches in diameter. There are many other ugly wounds and the man's body is, in fact, covered with bruises and lacerations.

The most serious injury is to the right arm. The horse grabbed the arm just above the elbow and literally ground the muscles and bones to pieces, severing the main artery. Overcome by exhaustion and the loss of blood, Mr. Cassavan finally fell to the ground unable to continue the unequal fight and the horse continued to bite him until, seeming to believe his victim dead, he walked away. Mr. Cassavan was out to the field alone and helpless, five miles from home, from four o'clock in the afternoon until eight o'clock in the evening, when his boys who had gone in search of him found him. It is most remarkable that he was then still alive. Dr. J. C. Williamson, who was summoned, said that it is rarely that a man would not bleed to death under such circumstances. The clotting of the blood in the artery may be due to the fact that his arm was so badly mangled and that when overcome he fell in the dust.

The horse was still near by when help arrived and seemed to have completely recovered from his "brain storm." He allowed himself to be captured and led home without any demonstration. The horse is ten years old and had been raised by Mr. Cassavan. He had never before shown any signs of viciousness.

Mr. Cassavan's condition is very serious. He is very weak from the loss of blood and there is danger of infection. It may be necessary to amputate his right arm. He is to be taken to Crookston this evening for hospital treatment. His condition is so very serious that the physicians can give no assurances of his recovery.

CLEARWATER DAM OUT

Clearwater River is Very High in Eastern Red Lake County.

Ralph Green phoned from his home in Gurney township Sunday evening that the Clearwater river is higher at that point than it has been at any time for the past sixteen years. He said that it was reported that the dam at Clearwater lake had gone out and that the gage of the river indicated that the report was correct.

People here have figured that the volume of water may reach Red Lake Falls today. However, almost the current of the river is slow near its source and rapid from Terrebonne to Red Lake Falls, but the water has not reach an unusual stage at this point. In any event it will probably do no damage as the ice has gone out of the river and the water will be carried away rapidly.

A World-Wide Business

THE Studebaker automobile factories make up the largest and most completely equipped automobils manufacturing plant in the world.

This great establishment is the development of 61 years experience in successful manufacturing. The Studebaker reputation for honesty and quality of manufacture is literally universal. Wherever there is civilization there are Studebaker vehicles.

In the 13 Studebaker plants at Detroit every part used in Studebaker automobiles is made. The floor space of the factories covers forty acres. To operate these factories it requires a force of 12,000 men. These workmen, with their families, would make up the population of an entire city.

The Studebaker laboratories for the testing and analysis of metal are probably the most completely equipped in the manufacturing business. There is not a college or university laboratory with better facilities.

Studebaker Supplies and Cars are handled by leadlng dealers in all parts of the world.

MEANS MUCH TO RURAL RESIDENT

DUNN GOOD ROADS BILL IS NOW A LAW OF THE STATE.

(Special Correspondence.)

St. Paul, April 14.—The R. C. Dunn good roads bill is now a law and with its advent passes into history the hundred and one makeshifts that have decorated the statute books for half a century. It is a combination of all state laws covering the subject of good roads. So important is the bill that no question will likely be made for its special distribution. Good roads to the majority of people means a level highway, free from ruts and in the majority of cases fairly passable and to them a law covering the subject is no more than the average mass of legal words framed by some expert and interpreted by those entrusted with law enforcement. Well, the Dunn bill is more than that; it is perhaps the most important act put on the statute books in some years and it carries a message of good things for thousands throughout Minnesota. It brings to the swamp locked farmers of remote cut over districts the cash of thousands of dollars and it provides for the man with a highway a part of corn he little realizes. Every county are cared for alike. The bill is not specific for size, being somewhere over fifty pages in length. Had the state legislature been so unwise as to send senate is to be congratulated on its passage.

It may not be generally known, but the Dunn good roads bill provides for an annual expenditure of nearly $1,400,000 and this amount is to be devoted not only to road construction but maintenance. The money is raised by a one-mill state tax, with another mill from a mill under the old law, and its distribution is to be equitable. No county can obtain more than 3 per cent of the amount or less than 1 per cent. Designation and location of needed roads is to be made by the county board of commissioners, with the state highway commission acting to an advisory capacity. Its duty is to supply experts, provide plans and specifications and to check the labor or expenditure of the money and arrange for the needed maintenance of the roads constructed. The county loses none of its rights. For the proper maintenance of the roads district inspectors are provided and they to o measure are to be under the supervision of the county board, with the state commission as an overseeing body.

The Dunn good roads bill did not get by without opposition. The Twin City press was against the measure from the start and it was bitterly fought by the paving companies. To the three big cities the tax proposed meant an expenditure of better than $600,000, with only a partial return. The fact that the appropriation of funds proposed meant the opening of thousands of farms to development was overlooked. With the paving companies back of the bill it was only the passing of that beautiful dream, a paved highway, miles in length, and free from automobile. They could not see anything else.

The new roads law is not for a system of highways for the purpose of making cities the hub of the universe. It is for everybody and the one thing to its favor is that every dollar spent for roads of any kind is provides for highways, not beautiful driveways. Speaking of the latter the land will be brought into commission through the increased value of farms and will bless the memory of its author.

Governor Eberhart is not in touch with the house, as was evidenced last week when that body ignored the governor's wishes and passed an efficiency commission bill, with the speaker and insurance governor as the appointing powers. His excellency was not given any place in the selection of the committee. The senate let the cat out of the resolution and the rumor is that the governor will veto the bill. It does not take kindly to the slight given his excellency.

Though passed by both houses over a week ago the soapartisan primary bill is still a long ways from being a law. A conference committee composed of members of both houses has it in charge, and between you and I, dear reader, they are out to slither bill it or make it so obnoxious that neither house will adopt the changes proposed. The objectionable feature is the nonpartisan idea as applied to the election of members of the house and senate and which the house leaders are, after giving their sanction, woke up to the fact, or rather they charged it, that unfriendly interests had put one over on them. They are trying to get back now by proposing that the nonpartisan idea be extended to state officers, which would include the governor. This simply means that the bill will never become a law.

The threatened revision of salaries by the legislature commission to carry the state officials. This week it was reported that the house and senate finance committee had agreed on straight salaries of $4,500 each for 1. A. Caswell, clerk of the supreme court, and George Authier, secretary to Governor Eberhart. Both receive much more than that in fees. The report also is that Secretary of State Schmahl and Auditor Iverson will receive $5,000 a year. Both Schmahl and Chase are working overtime to head off the calamity.

A boxing bill, which has been a fixture of every session since the time when the legislature put the ban on the ancient and fistcuffy sport, has been revived its quietus when the senate committee on general legislation reported the Moeller bill legalizing six-round contests with soft gloves out of business. The bill passed the house with votes to spare. In order to stop the strikes of the promoters the Twin City papers put the soft pedal on all news concerning the passage of the bill, but even this did not avail. Quietly a majority of the senators regarded the bill with favor, but what the folks at home would say was another thing.

It may not come in this generation, but some day the legislature will have a legislature where the call of "Hez, Rube," will not be the slogan and cry and country will be the summer. It three is one thing that nauseates it is the boisterous manner in the country when it is desired to kill a bill and the session of the legislature has been particularly strong in this respect. The one pleasant thing is that many who were stampeded by the cry have tumbled and it no'longer has the effect it did at the opening of the session.

Minnesota has not taken on woman's suffrage as yet, but this does not necessarily mean that all the fair leaders of the movement have gone to pot. They are very much on the job, as was evidenced last week when, without the knowledge of the state fair board, they secured from Governor Eberhart permission for the introduction in both houses of a bill creating a Woman's auxiliary to fair board and forced its passage through both houses under suspension of the rules the same day. It was only two days later that the board woke up and after securing the whole thing secured the return of the bill from the governor for further consideration.

As the state fair board tells it for months they have been bothered by a delegation headed by Mrs. Olberg of Minneapolis asking for a woman's aid in addition to the board. In answer the board adopted a resolution providing for a woman's auxiliary of three members and asked the president of the State Federation of Women's Clubs to make the selections. The list named did not include the delegation headed by Mrs. Olberg and she arranged a reprisal. Imagine the surprise of the board when they learned of the passage of the bill creating a board of three. And with expenses to be paid by the state, no. Democratic Governor O'Neill of Thief River Falls, who asked for the suspension of the rules on the bill, was among those in the senate who failed to see the joke and voted against it. Governor Eberhart is not in touch with the house, as was evidenced last week when that body ignored the governor's wishes and passed an efficiency commission bill, with the speaker and insurance governor as the appointing powers. His excellency was not given any place in the selection of the committee. The senate let the cat out of the resolution and the rumor is that the governor will veto the bill. It does not take kindly to the slight given his excellency.

AN EXCELLENT EXAMPLE.

L. E. Slyter Does Excellent Work With Split Log Drag.

If all of the farmers of Red Lake county, or even a comparatively small number of them, would follow the example of L. E. Slyter, Red Lake county would have some excellent public highways. Mr. Slyter has constructed a split-log drag and has dragged the road that passes his farm for a distance of a mile. The split log drag does wonderful work when used at the right time after a rain. There is no machine made, no matter how expensive, with which so much can be accomplished with a limited amount of labor.

IMPORTANT NEW LAW

Relating to Registration Tax and the Filing of Chattel Mortgages.

Two laws relating to the filing of instruments, making certain changes in which many people will be interested, have been passed by the legislature and approved by the governor. One law provides for a reduction in the mortgage registry tax. On mortgages executed after April 15 this fee is 15 cents for each one hundred dollars or any fraction on mortgages running not more than five years and 25 cents on mortgages running more than five years. On mortgages executed prior to April 2 the old rate of 25 cents per hundred dollars or major fraction is in force. The new rate also applies to unpaid balances on contracts for deed and extensions of loans.

The other new law requires that hereafter chattel mortgages shall be filed in the office of the register of deeds instead of in the offices of the various town clerks. The reasons advanced for this change are that the instruments should be filed where there is suitable vault room and in an office open to the public at all times.

The law requires that the town clerks, and municipal clerks shall on July 1st, 1913, deliver to the register of deeds all chattel mortgages, of sale of chattels and conditional sale contracts then on file with them and all records of the same in their custody. The clerks will be paid for the mileage covered by them in delivering the instruments to the register of deeds.

WILSON READS VIEWS

PRESIDENT UPSETS PRECEDENTS SINCE TIME OF JOHN ADAMS.

CONGRESS IN JOINT SESSION

Two Bodies Meet Together and Chief Executive Appears in Person Before Them—Thomas Jefferson Discontinued the Practice.

Washington, April 8.—Appearing personally before both bodies of congress, assembled in joint session today, President Woodrow Wilson read his special message to congress on tariff problems and thus upset the precedents of over one hundred years.

Conservatives Nonplussed.

When arrangements for the extraordinary affair got under way yesterday, congress gasped—that is to say, many of the more conservative members were completely nonplussed. They remembered that no president since the patron saint of the Democratic party, Thomas Jefferson, had done away with the custom upon his advent into office, had ever dreamed of delivering his views to the legislative body in person. The first two presidents of the United States, George Washington and John Adams, both read or delivered their messages. Jefferson, however, whose every act has always served as a criterion for Democrats of all ages since, explained his discontinuance of the custom in the following letter to congress:

Jefferson's Explanation.

"Sirs: The circumstances under which we find ourselves at this time, rendering inconvenient the mode heretofore practiced of making by personal address the first communications between the legislative and executive branches, I have adopted that by which shall be used on all subsequent occasions throughout the session. In doing this I have had principal regard to the convenience of the legislature, to the economy of their time, to their relief from the embarrassment of immediate answers on subjects not fully before them, and to the benefit thence resulting to the public affairs. I have also had an occasion found to these motives will further their approbation. I bid through you, sirs, to communicate the proposed message, with the documents accompanying it, to the honorable the Senate, and pray you accept for yourself and them the homage of my high regard and consideration."

Under ordinary circumstances the two bodies of congress meet together only every four years, and then only for the purpose of canvassing the electoral vote. As this is done to e wholly perfunctory manner, the meeting to joint session has heretofore been purely a matter of form. For this reason, some of the old line party leaders are criticising the Wilson innovation as an unfortunate change in the procedure of more than a century.

The president was not to enthusiastic over the closer contact which the president is establishing between the executive and legislative departments. They say Mr. Wilson may be prolonged to deliver all of his prepared messages in person during his entirey of office. This may, however, coincide with his announced intentions of making official visits to the floor of the house to confer with party leaders, will have the desired good effect.

More Trouble at Hazleton.

Hazelton, Pa., April 8.—Trouble occurred in connection with the opening of the Duplan silk mill here after A strike of eight weeks. The strike was settled through an agreement between the textile workers' association and the Duplan company. The Industrial Workers of the World refused to end the strike refused to accept the terms and when the basis reported, picket lines were set to induce them to remain away. It is charged that two of the pickets struck a girl. Later Industrial Workers of the World paraded the streets.

Senators' Direct Election.

Washington, April 3.—Direct election of United States senators became effective with the provisions of the constitution by Connecticut's ratification of the amendment on that effect. Pennsylvania states, the requisite three-fourths of all in the union, have approved the change. It remains only for the governors of all states which have acted favorably to formally notify Secretary Bryan and for him to issue a proclamation declaring the result. Connecticut's action is the second within the last few months.

Boston, April 6.—The latest of the most remarkable name is the German aristocracy is dead. He was Herr Pfoerster von der Hoelle (the doorkeeper of hell). He held an official post in Bavaria.

Relief for Shawneetown Refugees.

Shawneetown, Ill., April 7.—(Via Cairo, 8.)—The people of Shawneetown are facing the future with a more cheerful mien than for more than a week. With the Ohio river at a standstill, enough provisions on hand for the present—and more in sight—and the business buildings which were washed away will be undermined by water, still standing, the settled residents of the river town believe the worst is over. The threatened famine among the refugees in the hills behind the town was prevented.

Floods at Cedar Falls, Wis.

Menomonie, Wis., April 7.—Water is pouring over the gigantic dam of the Chippewa Valley Railway, Light and Power company at Cedar Falls, five miles above here, to a depth of five feet and nine inches—and the Red Cedar river and its tributaries are still rising. The dam at Cedar Falls furnishes normally a head of 35 feet, but the gates are said to be frozen, and it has been impossible to open them since the recent rains, and the water is backing up and flooding the low lands.

MONTENEGRO REFUSES TERMS

DEFIES SIX EUROPEAN POWERS WITH REFERENCE TO SCUTARI.

Regards Presence of War Vessels Violation of Neutrality Pact—Regret Stand of France.

Cettinje, April 8.—The little kingdom of Montenegro has thrown down the gauntlet to the six great powers. She declines to yield to the demand of the powers to abandon her attempts to gain possession of Scutari, and has officially announced that "there will be no departure from an attitude which conforms to the necessities of the state of war existing between the allies and Turkey.

An International Fleet.

An international fleet, comprising warships of Austria-Hungary, Italy, France, Germany and Great Britain is now blockading the Montenegrin port of Antivari. These include four Austrian warships, a British cruiser Dartmouth, Inflexible and Gloucester; the German cruiser Breslau; the Italian cruiser Pisa, and the French cruiser Edgar Quinet.

Russia is not represented by a warship, but has acquiesced in the naval demonstration.

Note is Sent.

On Saturday the British admiral sent the following message to the Montenegrin premier, Dr. L. Tomanovitch:

"I have the honor to inform you that the international fleet is assembled in Montenegrin waters as a protest of the great powers. I desire to call your excellency's attention to the presence of the fleet as a proof that the great powers are acting in concert and request that their wishes be fulfilled without further delay. Please inform me immediately that your government is ready to carry out the wishes of the great powers."

To this the Montenegrin premier replied in a note expressing regret at the presence of the fleet, which he considered a violation of the neutrality proclaimed by the powers at the beginning of the war, and to the effect that the government of Montenegro. The premier continued:

"Despite the pressure which the presence of the next implies, there will be no departure from an attitude which conforms to the necessities of the state of war existing between the allies and Turkey."

A brigade of Austrian troops from Gattaro has been massing near the Montenegrin boundary. The customary note has not been given the Montenegrin government and Austrian action is considered unfriendly and menacing.

Friedmann Resumes Treatments.

New York, April 8.—Dr. Frederick F. Friedmann has resumed treatments with his anti-tuberculosis vaccine after a week's withdrawal, necessitating 16 patients at Seton hospital, in the presence of the government physicians who are supervising the tests and the progress. All the patients were sufferers from pulmonary tuberculosis in an advanced stage.

American Killed by Cuban.

Havana, April 8.—Rudolph Warren, son of a well known prominent American sugar planter, died in a hospital here from a pistol wound in the abdomen, which he received in a duel Saturday with Hannibal Hess, a member of a wealthy Cuban family. The two young men have recently had several physical encounters and are reported to be rivals for a woman's affections. As a result, Hess challenged Warren to which, according to the Cuban code, conferred the choice of weapons on Warren. The duel was at 35 paces.

Four Firemen Are Injured.

Chicago, April 8.—Four firemen were injured, two of them probably fatally, in fighting a fire which destroyed beef boxes No. 2 of Armour & Co. in the Union stockyards. The loss is estimated at $500,000. The fire got under rapid headway and broke out in several places, following several explosions believed to have been caused by the blowing out of ammonia tanks. The beef house destroyed by fire is opposite the Morris & Co. plant, where, on Dec. 22, 1910, Fire Chief Horan and 22 firemen lost their lives.

POPE SLEEPS WELL

CONDITION MORE GRAVE, HOWEVER, HAS RELAPSE OF INFLUENZA.

STARTS WITH FAINTING FIT

Illness Began on Monday—Physicians Reassuring, but Anxiety Is Felt for Pontiff Whose Heart Is Affected.

Rome, April 10.—Pope Pius X. has suffered a relapse, and as is usual in relapses, his condition is considered graver than that occasioned by his illness of last month. The present attack began with a fainting fit, and Professor Bastianelli, the papal physician, was summoned late Monday night. He has attended the pontiff since then several times.

Vatican Official Statement Brief.

The official statement given out at the Vatican simply says:

"The pope is suffering from a relapse of the influenza."

The physician is attendance on the pope, however, reports that the pope's temperature shows a slight rise. This, however, does not prevent the patient from getting a fair amount of sleep.

The Conservative Osservatore, the Vatican organ, published the official statement last evening:

"Since yesterday evening the holy father has been indisposed with a relapse of influenza. His condition is causing no anxiety, but he requires much rest."

Relapse Causes Anxiety.

The truth is that the pope's relapse is causing great anxiety; because it was not expected, and for the further reason that at his advanced age there is the ever-present danger of his being unable to withstand the strain on the system.

During his recent illness, the pope was much depressed, but as he regained his health, his natural optimism disappeared. With the return of his influenza, depression is one of the symptoms that has again been manifested.

At 5 o'clock Monday evening the pope retired to his study. He had complained of feeling overtired. At just what hour he was overcome by a fainting spell has not been learned, but members of the household, rushing to his assistance, realized that his condition was serious and became greatly alarmed, as no physician was present.

Father Prendecine, the Vatican chronicler, was called and administered stimulants, which revived the pontiff.

Cardinal Merry del Val was hastily summoned. He was followed by Professor Marchiafava. Then the marquise di papa had already been put to bed, but was still suffering from recurrences of faintness. Pleding that the action of the heart was weak they injected strychnine, digitalin and camphor.

The sisters and nieces of the pontiff were notified immediately and wended once to the Vatican. They remained, however, at the bedside for only a few minutes.

Heated Election Campaign Closes.

Detroit, Mich., April 8.—An equal suffrage candidate for mayor of Detroit and one of the most heated spring political campaigns that Michigan has seen in recent years. Today Michigan voters will pass on five important constitutional amendments, the most important of which is the initiative, a measure which provides for the recall of public officials, and the referendum, a state highway commission, and a measure for the abolition of the state board of equalization.

Hat Pins Must Be Guarded.

Trenton, N. J., April 7.—In the future it will be unlawful in this state to wear hat pins unless their points are guarded. Gov. Fielder signed a bill, which becomes effective immediately, making it an act of disorderly conduct, punishable by a fine of from $5 to $20, for any person "to wear to a public place any device capable of lacerating the flesh of another person unless the point is sufficiently guarded." The law also provides that half the fine collected, shall go to the person making complaint.

SUFFRAGISTS MAKE DEMANDS

500 WOMEN URGE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

Parade Through Cleaned Streets Under Heavy Police

Washington, April 9.—Five hundred suffragists, representing every congressional district, armed with petitions demanding a constitutional amendment for votes for women, marched to the capitol and delivered their demands in person to their congressmen. In marked contrast with the disorderly scenes which attended the suffrage pageant here on March 3, when unruly crowds swamped the police, the marchers yesterday moved over perfectly cleared streets and under a police guard which was almost as numerous as the suffragists.

Each of the women carried into the capitol a copy of a petition to the members of congress asking support for the equal suffrage legislation.

Formal resolutions proposing constitutional amendments giving women the right to vote were introduced in both houses of congress, together with scores of petitions and memorials from various societies and individuals. Senator Chamberlain of Oregon and Representative Mondell of Wyoming introduced resolutions on their respective houses for the constitutional amendments.

SERVICES FOR J. P. MORGAN

Late Financier Was Member of St. George's Protestant Episcopal Church for 45 Years.

New York, April 8.—Memorial services for the late J. Pierpont Morgan were held in St. George's Protestant Episcopal church, of which he was for 45 years a vestryman and a while his funeral will take place, probably on Apr. 14.

Each worshipper found in the rack before him a neatly folded bulletin recording the death of Mr. Morgan and the a regu.. r attendant and took an active part in the services, one of his acustom, d duties being the passing of the collection plates. The new that he frequen by occupied, although all the pews in the church are free, was filled yesterday with strangers.

Falls Wh.. - Rope Breaks.

Chicago, April 8.—One woman fell to her death and a secondary injured when an improvises rope made by a torn bed sheet and a pillow with which her husband was attempting to lower her from a window, broke. More than a dozen others, including the injured woman's 1-year-old baby, were saved from suffocation in the fire that destroyed a three-story rooming house at 3141 South Michigan avenue. The injured woman is Mrs. Anna Devin, 33 years old.

OLSON IS ACQUITTED

JURY OUT THREE HOURS, BUT NEEDS ONLY ONE BALLOT TO DECIDE.

TAKES VERDICT COMPOSEDLY

Professor Thanks Jury, Then Hurried in Taxi to Tell Wife That He Is Again a Free Man.

St. Paul, April 10.—Prof. Oscar M. Olson was found not guilty of the murder of Clyde N. Darling, the lunedry driver, on March 5. The jury brought in a verdict of acquittal three hours after they had retired for deliberation. But one ballot was taken by the jurors.

Receives Verdict Calmly.

Mr. Olson received the verdict in much the same calm and composed manner that has characterized his bearing throughout the trial. He walked briskly as he entered the court room to learn his fate. Except for heightened color, he did not betray the ordeal through which he was passing.

However, while waiting for Judge Orr to come from his home and hear the report of the jury, Olson gradually lost some of his composure. His jaws worked spasmodically and he fingered the lastings of his shoes. He clasped and unclasped his hands as he shifted in his seat. His eyes wandered about the room and again were fixed intently upon the floor.

Mrs. Olson Not Present.

Mrs. Olson was out in the court room when the verdict was returned. Olson hurried to her, once he was declared free.

The jury left the court room and went to dinner. Exactly three hours after receiving their instructions, they were ready with their verdict.

Judge O. Orr, who was summoned by telephone and Professor Olson was brought to the court room from his cell in the county jail. Information was conveyed to his brother, Charles O. Olson, at the same time, and he entered the court room a few minutes after the prisoner arrived. The brothers did not meet. The prisoner remained in his chair beside the deputy sheriff, while his brother paced the floor outside the entrance.

Olson Clenches Teeth.

As the roll call of the jurors was begun read by the clerk, Olson clenched his teeth and gripped the arms of his chair. As the clerk read the verdict of "Not Guilty," Olson gave a deep sigh, his hands dropped to his sides and his face twitched as he struggled to suppress his emotion. A pretty much distorted his face for a moment and then was closed.

"You will release the prisoner," said Judge Orr to the deputy sheriff, "Mr. Olson is now a free man."

Olson started to his feet, but dropped back into his chair, gripping the hand of Court Herbert deputy Greene and Prosecutor Arthur Hendell as they congratulated him. Then he shook hands with the jurors, his face lighted up and he gripped their hands tightly. He had little to say to any one, however, except to Attorney Thompson, and hurried into his hat and coat as rapidly as he could, leaving the court room with his brother and Walter Fonsen, son of Mrs. Olson's attorney.

They summoned a taxicab and sped to carry the news to Mrs. Olson.

Only Intimate Friends.

There were no witnesses at their meeting except the intimate friends of the family.

Stan J. Donnelly, attorney for the defense, who has been with Olson extensively on the testimony of the actual shooting and quoted from the records to show the jury the contradictory evidence presented by the witnesses for the state, in the development of the methods used by the counsel for the defense, in the latter's address to the jury, was marked by hitting sarcasm and ridicule.

Case Strongly Not Sought.

"Picture that home, gentlemen," said he, "and see if your hearts do not beats aort and manhood will seek other places than the sanctity of a man's home to contest such an act as the deceased accomplished." Mr. Donnelly told the jury that he was not asking for sympathy.

OYSTERS AT ARCACHON BASIN

Writer Tells of Trip Through the Beds —Enjoyed Eating Them Fresh From the Sea.

Arcachon, France.—In the Basin d'Arcachon there are about fifteen hundred acres of oysterbeds. Getting across to the beds is short work, either by skiff-sailing or motorboat, and a good-hearted boatman will, if you do not want to wade, carry you through the shallows in no time. There, you can bend to the inland tide and examine the tiny oysters, sometimes as many as two or three hundred on one tile, at your pleasure, says a writer in Country Life. When the little bivalves are a year old they are carefully scraped from these tiles for commerce and exportation, many of them being brought to Whitstable, there to be fattened and sold as "natives." It is reckoned that 60 per cent of the embryo oysters never mature. The beds, both men and women work, but chiefly women, taking in their turn the tiles, bearing pretty pictures, too, with their vivid carmin colorings and blue oysters while standing, often knee deep, in the shallows. Sorting seems to be done, for the most part, by the older women, who, sitting outside their cabines, separate with dexterous hands the oysters from those too small still for use, the former being packed for sale and the latter put aside to nete is some shady corner, and ultimately thrown back on to the beds for further development. In Arcachon, the hotel proprietor may well be profligate in their supply of oysters, for they are a cheap luxury; but for real enjoyment, give me hole-d-cozen fresh from their beds, scooped from their pearly fluted shells by deft hands on the pontes-bleus or rids across the water in Michel's swift boats. Those are . . . oysters to remember! The whiff of the sea, blowing right across from Biscay's bay, providing ozonated tang, tapping against the prow, blue skies above, blue seas around.

NAPOLEON KIN IS A LABORER

Grandmother Matron of Hospital at St. Helena Gives Little Corporal Arrived.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Search by the Crittendon Memorial society of San Francisco for a reported grandson of Napoleon Bonaparte ended in a Los Angeles hospital. He is found, indeed, a workingman, is the person sought.

William Gordon is a son of the late John Gordon, a San Francisco jeweler, who, according to the Crittenden society, was unquestionably a son of the "Little Corporal." The mother of Mrs. Gordon rest in a cemetery near the Golden Gate.

William Gordon is sixty-three years of age. He says his father was not born on the island of St. Helena, as has been asserted, but near Edinburgh, Scotland, whither the late Mrs. John Gordon's mother was a Scotch woman—matron of the hospital at St. Helena during the imprisonment there on the Hellerophon—and he was given his name by her.

John Gordon married Amelia Jones, a Welsh woman, in London in 1864, and they came to America, settling in New Jersey. Conn., where William was born in 1847.

RULES THAT WIN WOMEN JOBS

Martha Parsons, Most Successful in Connecticut, Tells What .Brings Promotion.

New Britain, Conn.—"Don't fail to be punctual, be pleasant to your employers, to those under you, and to those with whom you associate, and above all, work, work hard, and work without a thought of yourself."

This is the advice to young women in business given by Miss Martha A. Parsons, the most successful woman known in Connecticut, who has been elected secretary of the Landers, Frary & Clark, a $2,000,000 corporation, and of Charles Parschber & Co., a $250,000 concern. Miss Parsons' position she succeeds George M. Landers, deceased, the founder of the business, and at present the president pro tem. of the Connecticut senate.

"It's the only method I followed in the 26 years I have been in the office, starting as stenographer and rising slowly to my present position," she comment, and now to the secretaryship," she added.

Miss Parsons' own code of business rules is headed by the motto, "Be on Next in importance to that is her opinion, is: Attend to business during business hours; get your pleasure afterward."

TRAINER BEATS LEOPARD

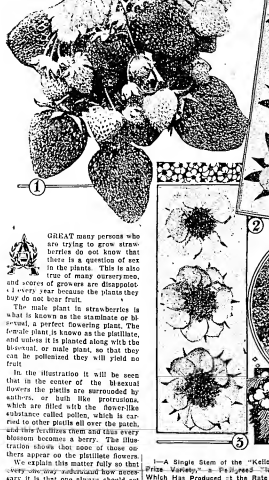
Man Attacked in Cage Beats Animal With His Fists at Leavenworth, Kan.

Leavenworth, Kan.—Capt. Gurley Wilson, an animal trainer, who was attacked by a leopard here, knocked the animal down with his fists and escaped from the training cage. The leopard was among a shipment of jungle beasts sent here recently. Wilson was giving the animal its first training when it leaped at him. He struck out with his right and uppercut and literally beat the brute into submission. The trainer's clothing was badly torn, but he was not injured.

SEX in STRAWBERRIES VITAL FACTOR

HOW TO RAISE BIG CROPS

by W.H. BURKE



GREAT many persons who are trying to grow strawberries do not know that there is a question of sex in the plants. This is also true of many nurserymen, and scores of growers are disappointed every year because the plants they buy do not bear fruit.

The male plant in strawberries is what is known as the staminate or bi-sexual, a perfect flowering plant. The female plant is known as the pistillate, and unless it is planted along with the bi-sexual, or male plant, so that they can be pollenized they will yield no fruit.

In the illustration it will be seen that in the center of the bi-sexual flowers the pistils are surrounded by anthers, or bulb like protrusions, which are filled with the flower-like substance called pollen, which is carried to other pistils all over the plants, and this fertilizes them and this every blossom becomes a berry. The illustration shows about a dozen of these anthers appear on the pistillate flowers.

We explain this matter fully so that every one may understand how necessary it is that one always should set bi-sexual plants, and that where the pistillate varieties also are chosen they should be so arranged that the pollen of the bisexuals will reach the bloom of the pistillate plants. In order that complete pollenation may be secured, we advise the setting of pistillate varieties between rows of bi-sexuals of the same sesseo. Or, one may set the pistillate varieties between bi-sexuals of an earlier and a later season.

In arranging the plants, if you desire to do so, you may set one row of pistillates, or two rows, or as many as three rows of pistillates, between the two rows of bi-sexuals, according to the easily carried over several rows of plants. As pistillate varieties frequently are the heaviest of yielders.

Let us consider at the outset the matter of soil, and let it be understood that strawberries will grow successfully under a great a variety of conditions as will potatoes or turnips or cabbage, or any other of the commonest sorts of vegetables or grains. In a word, your soil is just the kind of soil in which to grow strawberries whether it be sand, gravel, clay, loam, clay, black peaty soil, or vegetable soil.

The Soil a Feeding Trough.

Indeed, the soil may be likened to a feeding trough. It doesn't make any difference whether you feed the hogs from an oak trough or a pine trough—the result would be identical in either case. The soil is only a medium through which the plants receive their food.

Therefore, the important thing for the grower to do is to see that his soil, whatever its nature, is properly supplied with the elements necessary to the feeding and growth of the plants. Once we get this thought clearly in mind the whole matter of crop production is simplified, and each grower may be confident that he also will do just as well as anybody else if soil if it be in the proper condition for the sustenance and development of plant life.

Barnyard manure is one of the strawberry grower's most valuable assets. Therefore, he should give great attention to conserving this fertility and seeing to it that it is properly applied to the soil.

After the manure is spread comes the breaking up of the soil. In doing this work be careful to see that every particle of hard soil is worked up and into as mellow a state as it is possible to get it. The subsoil to which one should plow depends upon the nature and formation of the soil.

Where the soil is deep one may go as deeply as eight inches, but in shallower soils the depth should not exceed from four to six inches.

Fall or winter plowing we shall consider the three acific most common in the world over, namely, those in which clay predominates, those having a sandy nature, and the so-called black soil. In the more matter of furnishing the plant food to these soils the methods we have referred to will do for all of them, but from the mechanical point of view the treatment will be quite different.

How to Treat Sandy Soils.

In the case of soils where the sandy quality predominates the surface should be rolled and thoroughly compacted so that the plants may rest in a firm and close fitting manner of earth. While it is true that the roots of plants must have air, it also is true that they must not be given too much air, and unless the loose, coarse sand or sandy loam is compacted either by rolling or flooding, the roots will be oversupplied with air. However, rolling never is done if the soil is of all wet. To do so means the caking of the surface, which is one of the things always to be avoided.

Just the reverse treatment is true of clay soil so far as compacting goes, for it is the nature of clay to compact itself, and loosened, therefore, after rolling the soil, we need to pulverize it thoroughly before the plants are set and stir it frequently while plants are growing in order that the process of decay of the vegetable matter in the soil may be normally maintained. Therefore, cultivation should be deep, for in clay than in sandy soils. As a rule, cultivation should be at least four inches deep.

Having your soil in perfect condition, the next essential for big red berries is perfectly developed plants. Do you have purchased plants of a high quality from a reputable source, you may with confidence go forward with your work, and it is important that you make all of the preparations possible for the plants and so encouraging a productiveness as it is possible to do. One of the important things to be done is the removal of all buds and blossoms from the plant during the first season of its growth. When this is done all of the strength of the growing plant goes into the development of extensive roots and crown systems, and upon these depend the quality and character of the fruit yield. Therefore, be sure to check the plant's tendency to fruit while it is yet young by pinching off or cutting them off. One man will easily do this work on one acre in half a day.

Then there is the necessity of removing surplus runners. By surplus runners we mean those young plants that develop after you have formed your system. If your system is the single hedge row, then you will permit new runner plants to grow and will layer them directly in line with the mother plant. If you have adopted the double-hedge-row system, you will allow each mother plant to mature four plants with runners, and these runners will be layered X fashion, the mother plant forming the center of the X. But if you desire to grow your plants by the hill system, then you will allow no runner plants whatever to form, but the mother plant itself will be encouraged to develop a great fruiting system. The fewer runner plants the more vigorous the mother plant will be, of course, as the production of the runner plants draws heavily upon the physical resources of the mother plant.

Now you have the ground thoroughly prepared and your plants in hand, and we have reached the important operation of setting out the plants.

Use the dibble to make the opening in the soil and to close over the roots of the plants, just as you would do if you were setting a tomato or a cabbage plant, and the work will be done neatly and with dispatch.

Cultivation should begin as soon as possible after the plants are set in the ground, and this should be repeated every eight or ten days thereafter if the weather remains close. Whenever it rains, however, you should be in your strawberry field as soon as soil conditions render it possible to do so. But never cultivate the soil before the soil crumble when disturbed. Soil conditions always should determine the time of cultivation. One thing that never should be neglected is the tendency of the soil to form a crust. Here are some of the desirable results of cultivation: Cultivation prevents the crust from forming on the soil's surface and destroys all weed seed while they are in the germinating stage. Continuous, vigorous growth is encouraged only when the digestive organs of the plant are in a healthy condition. To keep the digestive organs in a healthy condition we must keep bacteria active. To keep bacteria active we must supply them with an abundance of air, and to supply air we must cultivate. Cultivation forms a dust mulch, a dust mulch retains moisture, moisture dissolves plant food, plant food makes active roots, active roots build up a big foliage, a big foliage makes perfect digestion, and perfect digestion develops a heavy fruit bud system and keeps up a continuous vigorous growth.

When the Season Is Over.

Let us add that the grower should never fail, at the last cultivation in the fall, to run a narrow furrow down the center of the spaces between the rows, so that all surplus water from heavy rains or melting snows may quickly drain away. Make this furrow from four to five inches deep.

Some growers prefer to cultivate their plants by the hill system. Others like the single-hedge row, and still others, the double-hedge row. Here are some growers who still continue to grow plants by the narrow-matted row, but this is something I never advise. The grower should consider his plants but when setting out his plants. If he is near a large city and has a trade that is willing to pay fancy prices for fancy fruit, there is no doubt but the greatest results will be secured from the hill system. If one's plot is limited as to size and all the work is to be done with a hoe, we advise setting plants 15 by 15 inches apart. This calls for 27,760 plants to the acre.

Where the fields are extensive and the grower is to cultivate with the horse, rows for the hill system should be made 30 inches apart and the plants set 15 inches apart in the rows. When these distances are observed 17,424 plants 14,609 plants for one acre.

The single-hedge row system flourishes in the way of insect pests or fungous disease. But this fact should never lead the grower to be unmindful of his duty to be at all times prepared to meet any troubles that may come to him from these sources.

Plants Must Be Mulched.

Mulching strawberry plants is a prime essential to the grower's success, and for several important reasons. One of these, the clean fruit which good mulching insures. Nothing is more distasteful or more unsightly then sandy, gritty strawberries, and the man who puts that sort of fruit on the market will have only himself to blame if he finds he is being his trade. Clean fruit, well dressed and carefully packed in boxes, will have an appetizing look to it, and the average man would rather pay 25 cents for a quart of such fruit than to pay 15 cents for the imperfect stuff frequently found upon the markets.

Fruit should be so clean as it lies on the straw that no cleaning process should ever be needed. And for mulching materials, any kind of straw will produce the desired results, but my first choice is wheat straw; the second choice is oat straw. However, shredded corn stalks, sorghum pomace, cane pomace, marsh hay, or any other material possessing the qualities found in these will serve the purpose. Atlantic coast growers also use the old vines found on the marketts.

And for mulching materials, any kind of straw will produce the desired results, but my first choice is wheat straw; the second choice is oat straw. However, shredded corn stalks, sorghum pomace, cane pomace, marsh hay, or any other material possessing the qualities found in these will serve the purpose. Atlantic coast growers also use the old vines found on the marketts.

In northern latitudes make the mulch from two to four inches deep between the rows, and anywhere from one-half inch to an inch over the plants themselves. In the spring simply part the mulch from over the plants, adding to it the mulching already between the rows. Mulch after the first good freeze in the fall, and put the mulching from over the plants as soon as real spring weather comes on.

The preparation for the second crop should receive attention directly after the first crop has been gathered and harvested. The first thing to do is to mow off the plants close to the crown. This may be done with the old reliable hoe or a scythe.

When the field has been entirely cleared of the refuse matter, whether it be burned over or raked off, take a breaking plow and throw a furrow from each side of the row into the center, leaving the space about four inches wide in the crown. Then go along the rows with a hoe and chop out the soil until the hills are from 12 to 20 inches apart, being careful to remove the weakest plants.

A five-tooth cultivator should be run between the rows, and the soil which the plow has made between the rows. In order to keep the plants that is drawn all around the roots of the plants which are allowed to remain, and in such a way as to cover all dead by with soil, doing the latter work with a hoe or cultivator.

This will aid the plants to form a new and vigorous root system, which will develop just above the old roots and below the crown. Cultivation and hoeing should proceed exactly as in the case of the new-set bed. Permit these plants to make runners and fill the vacant spaces in the rows are filled. For the second crop I advise that you keep the runners cut down and hedge row for all varieties.

Sometimes plants in the spring ride into a lack of vitality. Wherever this occurs I advise the use of stimulants. For this purpose of stimulating the plants to secure better results. It is the custom of many growers to use liquid manure, but I prefer a commercial fertilizer, and this I apply in the following way: Some time after the plants have begun to grow I scatter the fertilizer broadcast over the rows and cultivate it in.

This work should be done after all danger from frosts is past, and as cultivation never should be done while plants are blossoming, unless the soil is in sufficiently good condition to receive flying. I repeat that the looking after the plants in this way gives a double assurance of success in the growing of strawberries.

MAN IS BORN AGAIN

Removal of Brain Tumor Leaves Patient an Infant.

Gradually He Is Beginning the Use of His Faculties, and the Surgeons Say He Will Fully Recover.

Denver.—Every morning a number of the leading surgeons of Denver gather at the county hospital to watch the remarkable spectacle of a man sixty-three years old literally being born into the world. Each day the patient acquires the use of one or two more of his faculties, until he can now move, eat, recognize persons and speak a few words.

The man is Luther Dionne, who five years has been practically dying from a tumor in his brain, which has paralyzed, speechless, sightless and outwardly dead on December 30 last when two surgeons operated upon his brain.

They removed a tumor larger then a walnut from the cortex of the brain. The operation took an inch and the nerve fibers except those running to their ears. Joss sticks were burned and prayer papers thrown overboard in vain.

Finally, in the hope of propitiating the spirit, they seized upon a crew and bring to the floor the mate and threw it over the side. The whistling became whistling fan of the gods. Finally, according to Fitzgibbons, and the boat on dog propitiated them.

Neuchatel, Switzerland.—For the last three days the inhabitants of the village of Fleurier, lying near Lake Neuchatel, in the shadow of Mount Chasseron, have been in a state of panic. The people near by have moved their belongings to neighboring hills, where they remain in the open, watching the mountain peak in terror. A similar movement of Mount Carline began in 1889, but ceased after a few hours.

New York.—The Standard Oil company's tank ship Schuylkill, which arrived from Yokohama recently, not only narrowly escaped foundering in a typhoon in the Chine sea, in which one of the Chinese crew was lost overboard, but also was threatened with a mutiny because the remainder of the men persisted in thinking they were pursued by the dreaded "banshee" if not the Flying Dutchman. A weird wailing that seemed to pursue the ship, added to their fears. Joss sticks were burned and prayer papers thrown overboard in vain.

Finally, in the hope of propitiating the spirit, they seized upon a crew and bring to the floor the mate and threw it over the side. The whistling became whistling fan of the gods. Finally, according to Fitzgibbons, and the boat on dog propitiated them.

WORRIED OVER HIS ABSENCE

Dennis Redmond, Aged 99, Thinks He's Old Enough To, Even If His Daughter Does Worry.

New York.—When Dennis Redmond, who is a spry young man of ninety-nine, strolled into the house at 357 Morris avenue, the Bronx, where he lives with his daughter, Mrs. William H. Noeh, the letter asked whether he had been home since Friday morning. Redmond replied that he thought he was old enough to stay away from home overnight once in awhile. Didn't Noeh think so? Mrs. Noah admitted he was, but added that she and her husband, who is a battalion chief in the fire department, had been worried over his absence. So they decided to call the police.

He went out for a walk, he said, and then decided he would go down to see Aston place where he used to work and see some of his friends. Then, being near the old Fourth ward, he took a notion to visit some of his former cronies, some of whom are names linked with history, so. This he did, and the time passed pleasantly and rapidly that when one of his friends suggested that he spend the night he accepted and did not send word home.

He had no idea any one would worry about a young man past twenty-one. But Mr. and Mrs. Noah did worry—so much so that they told the police of the Morrisania station, who sent out a confidential alarm. Mr. Redmond seemed to think that was a highly foolish proceeding.

EARL as GOVERNOR

Believed that Duke of Connaught Will Not Return.

Peer Suggested as Successor as Governor General Has Had Noteworthy Career and is Well Qualified —Climate Affects Duchess.

London.—The duke of Connaught, accompanied by his wife and daughter, left Canada recently for England, and it is generally understood here that he will not return to Ottawa though as yet there has been no official announcement to that effect. The duke is known to have a strong and sincere liking for Canada, and doubtless would be pleased to remain there another two years. But the climate apparently has never agreed with the duchess of Connaught and, in view of this fact, it is believed certain that the duke has now practically ended his tenure of office as governor general of the dominion.

The question as to who will be named to succeed the duke of Connaught at Ottawa has become a subject of lively speculation here. The names of half a dozen prominent persons have been mentioned, among them at least two close connections of the royal family. But the best authorities seem to agree that the young earl of Beauchamp has the hardest track and is most likely to win the race. He has the backing of the cabinet, which should count 99 points in his favor.

Lord Beauchamp is at present first commissioner of works, a position involving mainly the care of all national buildings, royal palaces, and the holder of which is also a cabinet minister. For a man of his years—he has just passed forty—his career has been one of rather unusual distinction. At the age of twenty-four he was the mayor of the city of Worcester, and before he had reached his twenty-eighth birthday he was governor of New South Wales, one of the most trouble offices of its kind in the gift of the crown.

As governor of New South Wales he is said to have displayed executive ability of a high order.

In conclusion, it may be said that Lord Beauchamp is of a very pious turn of mind. He has always taken an active interest in school and Sunday school work, and in his youth he was a prominent Sunday school worker, so as to appear in the role of a street preacher.

The Canadian post, there is little doubt, would be occupied during his term by the Countess Beauchamp, who is a the handsome, intelligent daughter of the duke of Westminster, and before her marriage, some ten years ago, was Lady Loftus Grosvenor. She has always taken a keen interest in her husband's political career.

It is rather an interesting coincidence that at the warmest friends in Princess Patricia of Connaught, who has been a frequent visitor to Madresfield Court, the Worcestershire beautiful home of Lord and Lady Beauchamp. Their eldest son, Viscount Elmley, is nine years old, and they have four other children.

HOBOES FEAST FROM GRAVE

Roast Ducks, Pigs, Wines and Delicacies on Chinese Mound Provide Splendid Banquet.

Philadelphia.—Before the funeral cortege of Tung Chong, a wealthy Chinaman who died here, was laid out of the cemetery gates where Chong had been buried, there was a wild scramble of hobos of all descriptions. A few hours previously the body of the Chinaman, where a great feast awaited them. On the casket and on the grass were spit roast ducks and pigs, Chinese wines and nuts and other delicacies to help Chong across the Styx."

When the crowd of twenty-five hungry hobos finished there was little left for Chong. From many carriages the 150 or so Chinese mourners forsook a scrape of cooked paper hearing prayers.

The Chinese believe the devils who prey in the air are dead have to stop and read all the prayers, and the mourners of Chong believe that they have hindered enough to keep the devils engaged until he was safely buried.

For ten years Chong has either been president or treasurer of the Ko Leong Tong, and his word was law in that society. He was one of the richest Chinamen in this city.

HAS HIS PLACE ON THE EARTH

Ironist May Be a Little Trying at Times, but He Goes About Doing Good.

The ironist is a person who counts in the world. He has all sorts of unexpected effects on both the people he goes with and himself. His is an insistent personality; he is as troublesome as a missionary. And he is a missionary; for, his own purpose being a comprehension of his fellow souls, he makes them conscious of their own souls. He is a hard man; he will take nothing on reputation; he will guarantee for himself the qualities of things. He will not accept the vouchers of the world that a man is wise or clever or sincere, behind the impenetrable veil of his face. He must probe until he elicits the evidence of personality, until he gets at the peculiar quality which distinguishes that individual soul. For the ironist is after all, a connoisseur in personality, and if his connoisseurship partakes too often of the character of cross-examination, it is only as a lover of the beautiful, a possessor of taste, that he inquires. He does not want to see people squirm, but he does want to see whether they are alive or not. If he pricks too hard, it is not from malice, but merely from error in his estimation of the toughness of their skins. What people are inside is the most interesting question in the world to the ironist. And, in finding out, he stirs them up. Many a petty, doubting spirit goes to challenge and fight into a sort of self-respect. And many a bagged-wind does he puncture.—Atlantic Monthly.

SEVEN-SENATORS BILL.

The bill proposing a vote on a constitutional amendment that would increase the number of senators that any legislative county may have to seven has been passed by the state senate and has been recommended for passage by the house committee.

It would be idea to ridiculed by the city press, but with the same cheerfulness as two years ago when the proposition was offered by south Minnesota senators as a substitute for reapportionment.

Though the Gazette, in common with many northern Minnesota people, has stood long for reapportionment, there was no hesitancy in advocating the opinion that seven districts may have been the limit of the senators they permit to each county shall constitute a senatorial district entitled to one senator, every power, less, that would have solved our representation problems for all time, and would have brought equality be-tween the voters as a proposed constitutional, but though right in theory, it is possibly so radical as to be not altogether unreasonable.

Now the present constitution has been in force many centers of population have grown in importance until all now thickly county has seven senators. The members of the legislature, in offering the proposition, say in effect: "Instead of proposing a change modeled literally after the present constitution, we suggest that the limit be that of the present senatorial representation of the most populous county, but never increased beyond that number-seven."

Isn't that reasonable? It amounts to a concession by the people of the rural districts to the people of the more populous districts, but can one conceive that the country people can afford to grant since it will not defeat the purpose of the proposed change—that of limiting the senatorial representation as the bill now latter may be a well-balanced dual legislative body with the houses so constituted that the one may serve as a check upon ill-advised or too hasty action on the part of the other.

The English suffragettes are showing the anarchists a few things and are perhaps more to be feared.

The present is just about the right time to begin to boost for the big Red Lake County fair.

Though the weather man is supplied with various instruments, most of them no doubt very useful, he may give a decided advantage by observing the weather vane on this editor's sanctum.

The "full crew" bill being considered by the legislature does not attempt to take from the railroad officials the authority to decide what their trainmen shall refrain from overtime-subjecting to insolvency.

The high hat used to be worn as a political campaign badge. It is now worn by politicians when in search of votes and by those who desire to create the impression that seems to necessitate some dissimulation. Still it cannot be said that the plug hat indicates accurately the distinction between the politician and the statesman.

"My New Studebaker"

There's a note of pride in the remark. To own a Studebaker buggy is to own the finest, classiest looking, lightest running vehicle on the road.

Slender, yet sturdy wheels, flexible bent-reach gear of the new Studebaker pattern, well proportioned, graceful lines, upholstery of the kind that makes you want to lean back and enjoy yourself, and the Studebaker double ironed shafts, strong and shapely.

Why wouldn't any man be proud to own a Studebaker?

The judgment of Solomon was again exemplified in municipal court last Saturday when Judge N. W. Tarrant sentenced an itinerant paper-hanger and plasterer to a bath-cut, shave and a bath and remanded the custody of his person to Chief of Police Ericson until the sentence had been duly executed.

The offender was picked up near the Great Northern depot after a prolonged abstinance from work and water. On being brought before the court his personal appearance seemed to warrant an exceptional sentence and so the stove mealioned "fine" was imposed.—The: River News Press.

SYNOPSIS.

Irish Cannon, the bonanza king, and his daughter, Rose, who had passed a year in Europe, have returned to their home in Newport, her father to face the charges of Dorchuk, Ryan calls on his mother to beg a full restitution for his wife, and is refused. The determined old lady refuses to have anything to do with the "Irish girl" and from regard into a marriage with Homer Iverson, a stockbroker, who is still years his senior. His mother, Mrs. Ryan, Cannon and his daughter have moved to America. Dorchuk dies in transit from storm in spoon-bill, Cannon's yacht, and Rose and Ryan meet. Ambrose's wife, Mary, comes to Dorchuk back to life.

CHAPTER VI.—(Continued.)

"I don't see how she could do that if—if appearance neck and all. I don't think that's the kind of dress to wear in a theater. It's too sort of conspicuous."

"I think Hannah's right," said Josh decidedly, nodding at Benzy. "It don't seem to me the right thing for a lady. Looks fast."

"What do you know about it, Josh Meeker?" said Hazel pugnaciously. "You're a clerk in a jewelry store."

"Kinder I am," retorted Josh, "but I guess that don't prevent me from knowing when a thing looks fast. Clerks in jewelry stores ain't such numbers as you might think. And, anyway, I don't see that being a clerk in any kind of a store has anything to do with it."

Hazel was saved the effort of making a crushing reparte, by Pearl, who had been silently eating her lunch, now suddenly launching a remark into the momentary pause.

"Did Uncle Dominick go to the bank?" she asked, pulling a piece of Boopid bice open to Benzy's face.

An instantaneous, significant silence fell on the others, and all eyes turned inquiringly to Benzy. Her air of self control became slightly exaggerated.

"No, he stayed at home with me," she replied, picking delicately at the meat on her plate.

"But I suppose he felt real hurt and annoyed," said Hannah. "He couldn't have helped it."

Benzy did not reply. She knew that she must sooner or later tell her sisters of Dominick's strange departure. They would find it out otherwise and suspect more than she wanted them to know. They, like the rest of the world, had no idea that Benzy's brilliant marriage was not the domestic success it appeared on the surface. She moved her knife about with no air arranging hand, and, as Hazel started to speak, said with as carelessness an air as she could assume:

"Dominick's gone. He left this morning."

"Gone where?" exclaimed Hazel. This was the test question that Benzy had schooled herself in an answer in the car coming up.

"Oh, up into the country," she said nonchalantly. "He's worn out. They work the life out of him in that big ebbe bank. He's getting insomnia and thought he'd better take a change now before he got run completely down, so he left this morning and I'm a gay grass widow."

She laughed and drank some water. Her head did not sound to her own ears convincing and she was aware that, while Hannah was evidently satisfied by her explanation, Hazel was eying her ponderingly.

"Well, if he's got insomnia," said Hannah, "he'd better take his holiday right now. That's the best thing to do. Take it in the beginning. Before father took ill—"

Here Josh interrupted her, as Hannah's reminiscences of the latter's tractor's last illness were long and exhaustive.

"Whereof you say he'd gone?" he queried.

"I can't remember the name," Benzy answered with skillfully-assumed indifference; "somewhere down toward Santa Cruz and Monterey, some new place. And he may not stay there. If he doesn't like it, he'll just move around from place to place."

"Why didn't you go, too?" said Pearl.

This was the second question Benzy had dreaded. Now suddenly she felt her throat contract and her lips quiver. Her usually iron nerves had been shaken by her passion of the night before and the shock of the morning. The unvented sensations of gloom and apprehension closed in on her again, and this time made her feel weak and tearful.

"I didn't want to. I hate moving around," she said, pushing her chair back from the table. Her voice was a little hoarse, and suddenly feeling the sting of tears under her eyelids she raised her hands to her hat and began to fumble with her veil. "You should I leave my comfortable flat to go trailing round to a lot of bath-hull hotels? That sort of thing doesn't appeal to me at all. I like my own home, and my own bed, and my own bath-tub. I'm more of an old maid than Hannah. Much, so long, people. I must be traveling."

She laid her napkin on the table and jumped up with the assumption of brisk liveliness. She paid no attention to the expostulations of her relatives, but going to the glass arranged her hat and veil, and although her face when turned back to the table she had regained possession of herself. Her veil was down and though her cheeks looked unusually flushed, and her dark eyes, with their slanting outer corners, brighter and harder than ever. She hurried through her goodbys on the plea that she had shopping to do, and almost ran out of the house, leaving a trail of perfumery and high, artificial laughter behind her.

For the next week she waited for news from Dominick and sons came. It was a long, trying seven days. Added to her embarrassment of mind, the loneliness of the flat was almost unendurable. There was no one to speak to, no one to share her anxieties. Her position was unusually friendless. Even her marriage had lifted her from the ranks of working women she had always had a feeling of kinship with, and her companions that they had dropped away from her, realizing that she wished to cut all ties with the world of her humble beginnings. New friends had been hard to make. The wives of some of the bank officials, and odd, aspiring applicants for such honors as social position, were her only contacts with the august name of Ryan, were all she had found where with to make a circle and a visiting list.

But she was intimate with none of them and was now too worried to seek the society of mere acquaintances. She ate her solitary meals in oppressive silence, feeling the Chinaman's eyes fixed upon her in ironic disbelief of the story she had told him to account for Dominick's absence. Ent as slowly as she would, her dinner could not be made to occupy more than twenty minutes, and after that there was the long evening to be interminable evening, to be passed. She read a great number of books—and when she returned from her after noon shopping she brought a bundle of evening papers home with her. She would read them slowly, at first the important items, then go over them for matters of less moment, and finally read the advertisements.

At the end of the week she felt that she must find out something, and went to the bank. It was closed, and she cash a small check and over this transaction see if the paying teller would vouchsafe any information about Dominick. She pushed the check through the opening and, as the cash counted out the money, said glibly:

"Do you hear anything of my wandering husband?"

The teller pushed the little pile of silver and gold through the window toward her and leaning forward, said with the air of one who intends to have a leisurely moment of talk:

"No, we haven't. Isn't it our place to come to you for that? We were wondering where he'd gone at such a season."

Benzy's delicately-gloved fingers made sudden hests to gather up the coin.

"Oh, he's just loafing about," she said as easily as was consistent with the disappointment and alarm that gripped her. "He's just wandering round from place to place. He was getting insomnia and wanted a change of scene."

She snapped the clasp of her purse before the man could ask her further questions, nodded her good-bys, and turned from the window. Her face changed as she emerged on the wide, noisy steps that led to the street. It was plucked and pale, two lines drawn between the eyebrows. She descended a step slowly, the flood of magnificent sunshine bearing no warming influence upon the chill that had settled upon her. Many of the passing throng of men looked at her—a pretty woman in her modishly-made suit of tailored cloth and close-fitting brown turban with a touch of white gardenia feather at one side. Under her dotted veil her cheeks had regained color, looked naturally clear and rosy, and her eyes, accustomed by a dark line beneath them, were in attractive contrast to her reddened hair. But she was not thinking of herself or the admiration she evoked, a subject which was generally of overpowering interest. Matters of more poignant moment had crowded all else from her mind.

The next week began and advanced and still no news from Dominick. He had been gone fourteen days, when one evening in her perusal of the paper she saw his name. Her trembling hands pressed the sheet down on the table, and her eyes devoured the printed lines. It was one of the many short despatches that had come from the flood-hill mining towns on the recent storms in the Sierra. It was headed Rocky Bar and contained a description of the situation at Antelope and the snowbound people there. Its chief item of information was that Bill Cannon and his daughter were among the prisoners of Porter's Hotel. A mention was made, only a line or two, of Dominick's wide acquaintance, but it was treated lightly and was no idea of the real seriousness of that almost fatal excursion.

Benzy read the two short paragraphs many times, and her spirits went up like the needle of a thermometer when the quicksilver is grasped in a warm hand. Her relief was intense, painful and relaxing, as the sudden cessation of a pain. Not only was Dominick at least found, he was found in a place as far removed from his own family and its interests as he was from her. And most of all he was shut up, incarcerated, with Bill Cannon, the Bonanza King. What might not come of it? Benzy was not glad of the storm, but it seemed a wonderful piece of luck that that unpleasant episode the society of mere acquaintances. She ate her solitary meals in oppressive silence, feeling the Chinaman's eyes fixed upon her in ironic disbelief of the story she had told him to account for Dominick's absence. It all. Come back to me. Please come back. Don't be angry with me. I am your wife. You chose me of your own free will. That I loved you so that I forgot honor and public opinion and had no will but yours, you know better than any one else in the world. It isn't every man, Dominick, that gets that kind of love. I gave it then and I've never stopped giving it, though I've often been so put upon with neglect that she would be things I didn't mean and done things I've been ready to kill myself for. Here I am now, waiting for you, longing for you. Come back to me.

"Your loving wife, BERNY."

She read the letter over several times and it seemed pretty well. Its anxious was she to have it go as soon as possible that, though it was past ten, she took it out herself and posted it in the letterbox at the corner.

CHAPTER VII.

Snow-Bound.

While the world went about its affairs, attended to its business, read its papers, sent its telegrams and wrote its letters, the little group at Antelope was as completely cut off from it as though immured in a strip of sand in an unknown sea. A second storm had followed the original one, and the end of the first week saw them snow-bound in deeper than at Antelope's trickle of roofs and smoke-stacks, in a white, crystal-clear wilderness, solemn in its stillness and loneliness as the primeval world.

The wires were down; the letter carrier could not break his' way in to them; their letters were sent and received no mail. Confined in a group of rude buildings, crouched in a hollow of the Sierra, they knew not for the first time what it was to be outside the circle of civilization in which their lives had heretofore existed. They were face to face with the nature they thought they had conquered and which now in its quiet ground them down in power and held their own small helplessness. Pressed upon by that enormous and indifferent force, they drew nearer together, each other, and until quarrels in the room from the contrasting immensity without, each characteristic unconsciously declared itself, evoking irritations and petticoats and becoming bolder and more open.

They accepted their captivity in a spirit of gay good humor. The only two members of the party to whom it seemed irksome were Bill Cannon and the actor, both girding against a confinement which kept them from their accustomed courses of action. The other abandoned themselves to a childish, almost fantastic enjoyment of a situation unique in their experience. It was soon to end, it would never be repeated. It was an adventure charged with romance, accidental, unsought, as all true adventure is, and which would was forgotten for these few days of imprisonment against the mountain's mighty heart. It did not exist for them. All that was real was their own little party, the white-washed passages and walls of Porter's, the dining room with its fire-place, the homely fare, and the parlor at night with a settled circle about the steadily blazing logs.

On the afternoon of the sixth day Dominick made his first appearance down stairs. He entered the dining room with slow painfulness, hobbling between Perley and the doctor. The former's arm took the place of his cane for a dignified dark-brown dressing-gown, contributed to his comfort by Canndo, and which, cut to fit the burly proportions of the Bonanza King, hung around the long, lank form of the young man in enveloping folds.

The parlor was reserved for Miss Cannon sitting before the fire. Dominick had ceased to feel bashfulness and constraint in the presence of this girl, who had been his companion when he will if not against her own—into the position of a hotel attendant. The afternoon when they had sat together in his room seemed to have vanished away all his shyness and self-consciousness. He thought now that it would be difficult to establish that intercourse with a being who was so natural, so spontaneous, so frankly natural. He found himself treating her as if she were a young boy with whom he had been placed on a sudden footing of careless, cheery intimacy. But her obtuse seeming—what she presented to the eye—was not in the least boyish. Her pale, opaque blondness, her fine, rich outlines, her softness of miles, were things as completely and graciously feminine as the most epicurean admirer of women could have wished.

Now, at the sight of her bending over the fire, he experienced a sensation of pleasure which vaguely surprised him. He was hardly conscious that all the time he had been dressing and while he came down stairs he had been anxious that she would be there. He sent a quick glance ahead of him, saw her, and looked away. The pain of his fast was violent, and without the support of the doctor and Perley he knew that he was getting his chair and his attendants were rattling him, she had turned from the contemplation of the fire. He already knew her well enough to have a comfortable assurance of her invariable quick tact. It was not till the two men were leaving the room that she turned to him and said, as if resuming an interrupted conversation:

"Well, how do you like the parlor? It's pretty, isn't it? I feel as if it belonged to me."

"It's a feminine parlor," he answered, looking about him. "Never saw a better one. Who's the gentleman with the wreath of wax flowers round his head?"

"That's Mark Grainger. He comes from here, you know; and you mustn't laugh at those flowers, they came off his coffin."

"My father knew him," said the doctor, with unfeelingly. "There were lots of queer stories about Jim Grainger. He killed a man once up at Reno. You've a fine fire here, haven't you?"

"Fine. It's never allowed to go out. What do you think I intend to do this afternoon? Sit here and entertain and instructing you."

"That's all right," he said somewhat uneasily. "I don't feel in the least as if I wanted to be instructed."

She rose and moved to the center-table which was covered with an illustrated French Revolution.

"Before you came down I was looking over these books. You've a lot of them. Mrs. Perley says they've been accumulating for years, and that men have left them and some of them have the names of people I know in them. I thought perhaps you might like to read some of them."

Dominick cast a hasty disparaging glance over the books. He was not much of a reader at the best of times.

"What are they," he said, "novels?"

"Some," She sat down by the table and took up the volume nearest to her. "Here's 'Tale of Two Cities.' That's a fine book."

She reached the open end to behest, and presented the new-comer.

"Mr. Ryan, this is Mr. Buford who is moored in here with us. Mr. Buford came here the same day as you, only he came on the Murphyville stage."

The next sat down between them on one of the horsehair chairs that were acotably arranged round the table. The firelight threw a warm illumination on the hony angles of his thin face and glazed the backward sweep of his dark, dark brown, and worn combed away from his forehead, where a pair of heavy, flexible eyebrows moved up and down like an animated commentary on the conversation. When anything surprising was said they went up, turning into peaks or patches of hair drawn down. He rested one hand on the arm of the horsehair chair, and, sitting bolt upright, buttoned tight into his worn frock-coat, turned a glance of somewhat deprecating amiability upon the invalid.

"You had a pretty close call, a pretty close-call," he said. "If the operator at Rocky Bar hadn't had the sense to wire up here, that would have been the end of your life story."

Dominick had heard the tale from every member of the snowed-in party. Repetition was not making it any more agreeable, and there was an effect of abrupt annihilation in the last sip of ever which was merely a word of comment.

Dramatic Form of Suicide.

A variation of the suicide mania has just come to light in Morena, northern Italy, where a wealthy manufacturer the other day met a fantastic death. He bought a coffin, took it home, and setting fire to some cotton in his room took his place in the coffin to await death. When he had went to call her master next day she found a card on the door on which was written: "Being undertaker I shall take away my corpse." The police were consulted, and entering the room, they found the coffin with the charred body of the manufacturer, wearing his decorations. Pinned upon his breast was a letter stating that his fast was a document directing the manner of his obsequies and granting a pardon to all who attended the funeral.

Very Easy Money.

An Alabama (Kan.) paper tells how a crowd of college boys, seeking work in the harvest fields, were hunted in that town. The confidence man found the boys and believed one that was the talk he gave the collegians: "I'm J. J. Jackson. I'm looking for about twelve high grade harvesters for the Jackson ranch, which my father owns. We have several girls from the east visiting us, and as the boys need a rest we look all right to me. If you'll let me have a dollar I'll take a couple of good fellows like you alone." Twenty in one group paid a dollar apiece, and that is the last any one saw of Mr. Jackson.

The Family Trouble.

"Why doesn't that house of yours rent?"

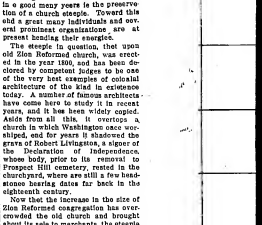
"For the same reason I myself don't do a lot of things."

"What reason is that?"

"My wife won't let me."

TO PRESERVE RELIC

People of York, Pa., Plan to Keep Famous Steeple.



Old Zion Reformed Church Is Soon to Be Razed and Movement Is Started to Keep This Priceless Treasure.

York, Pa.—The most important undertaking which has interested York in a good many years is the preservation of a church steeple. Toward this end a great many individuals and several prominent organizations are at present bending their energies.

The steeple in question, that upon old Zion Reformed church, was erected in the year 1800, and has been declared by competent judges to be one of the very best examples of colonial architecture of the kind in existence today. A number of famous architects have come here to study it in recent years, and it has been widely copied. Aside from all this, it overtops a church in which Washington once worshiped, and the graves of Robert Livingston, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, have been moved to be reinterred in Prospect Hill cemetery, rested in the churchyard, where are still a few headstones bearing dates far back in the eighteenth century.

Now that the increase in the size of Zion Reformed congregation has overcrowded the old church and brought about its sale to merchants, the steeple is in danger of going the way of many a priceless colonial treasure here in past years, unless speedy action is taken. Friends of the shrine's purchaser would have liked to have him remove the historic relic to Lancaster and place it over a church he has built in that city, but in making the sale the thoughtful trustees of Zion congregation reserved right to the steeple. However, it must come down and be disposed of in some manner.

Those heading the project for its preservation are highly impressed by a plan prepared by Reinhardt Dampwolff of this city, who is chairman of the southern Pennsylvania chapter of the American Institute of Architects upon preservation of historical monuments. Mr. Dampwolff's idea is to rebuild the brick tower of practically the same height as at present, surrounding the base by a portico which can at the same time act as the base of the instrument and buttress to the tower. The walls of the tower under the portico would bear inscriptions written in bronze or marble. The interior would have a stairway for access to the belfry and a clock. The ... cost is estimated at from $6,000 to $7,000, with probably $1,000 annually for maintenance. Such a monument, placed upon old Penn common, would be, it is believed, a fitting memorial to York's position in colonial history.

TO HONOR TWENTY WOMEN

Sixteen, Already Elected Fellows of Royal Geographical Society, Are Renowned Travelers.

London.—In addition to the sixteen women just elected fellows of the Royal Geographical society, four organization has the names of twenty to come under consideration.

All the women on whom the distinction so far has been conferred are travelers of the first importance. They include:

Miss Sinnette Taylor, sister of Miss Annie Taylor, the first white woman to live in the Himalayan valley in Tibet. She has been around the world, spent some time with the Rajum of Bhopel in India and has twice ventured three times to see her sister in Thibet. She has traveled extensively in Persia and the Caucasus.

Miss Olive Temple (nee McLeod), who made a daring and romantic journey of 4,500 miles to Wadai, in Central Africa, to pay a last tribute to Lieutenant Boyd Alexander, murdered by natives of Wadai in May, 1910. She was the first white woman to cross the journey and described her adventures in her book, "Chiefs and Cities of Central Africa."

Miss Gertrude Bell and Miss Emma Bell, daughters of Sir Hugh Bell, who have traveled extensively. Miss Gertrude Bell was once robbed by Kurds at Mirbjeg, Asiatic Turkey. She also achieved fame by making several first ascents of mountains in the Burmese Overland.

Mrs. Longstaff, wife of D. Thomas Longstaff, the explorer, who has also climbed the Alps, Caucasus, Himalayas and Rockies.

TO SAVE HUSBAND

MRS. OLSON CONFESSES TO RELATIONS WITH DARLING ON STAND.

STORY NOT COMPLETE YET

Many Women Throng Courtroom to Hear the Wife's Story of Infidelity to Husband.

St. Paul—Freely sacrificing her self completely in defense of her husband, Mrs. Clara M. Olson took the witness stand to the trial in St. Paul and testified in relations with Clyde Darling, the laundry driver who was killed by her husband March 5.

Sobbing Audibly.

She struggled valiantly to control her emotion and broke down several times, sobbing audibly. Her lips trembled continually and her tightly clenched hands showed the strain she was undergoing. Often her voice failed her and she was forced to stop and dry the tears from her cheeks.

Shaking with emotion she could not control, she forced herself to the task and told the story of her unfaithfulness. An occasional interruption by County Attorney O'Brien, objecting to the remoteness of some of the testimony the defense attempted to draw from her, added to her confusion, but she forced herself to continue.

The preliminary questions concerning her age and residence she answered resolutely and distinctly, but when the attorney for the defense asked her when she was married her voice broke and she was weeping as she replied:

Answers to Questioning.

"Six years ago."

"Are there any children?" was the next question, and as she answered: "One little girl; five years old," she sobbed aloud and it was several minutes before she regained her composure and was able to answer the next question.

Her voice was firmer as she told that she began boarding and had met him first in November, 1917. When Attorney Sten G. Donnelly asked:

"What relations, if any, did you have with Darling after that date?" her voice was nearly audible as she started to answer.

The examination here was interrupted by Judge Dibell, who explained to her that the court could not compel her to answer any question which might indicate a crime she had committed.

Mr. Donnelly then asked:

"Are you willing to answer that question?"

"I am," Mrs. Olson replied, raising her head and speaking emphatically.

Relations Began in 1912.

"It was in June, 1912, that he hugged and kissed me and that was when I told my husband of it first. I would have told him more, but I didn't. He answered the witness, sobbing again.

"It was not that I did not want to tell him. It was the shame of it. I told him that much so that he would make the fellow stay away from the house."

Mrs. Olson testified that she told Darling after that and that he made threats against her husband and her.

"I told him that it was wrong and he ought to stop. I told him I was sorry he had."

Here the witness broke down again, crying, and it was some time before she was able to continue.

"I told him he would have to stay away from the house and he would quit patronizing his laundry or we would have to quit this. That's all I said."

These statements by the witness corroborated the testimony of her husband that she had warned him of Darling's attitude. She said no threats were made by Darling that time and that after that she confessed to her husband.

Seats Saved for Women.

It was distinctly a "women's day" and a section of seats was reserved for them. More than 200 men managed to get in before the room was filled. Some of them were compelled to stand, but as long as they were able to get a look at Mrs. Olson, their chief object of interest, they appeared to be satisfied.

Pipestone Travelers Elect.

Pipestone.—A largely attended meeting of Pipestone county, Minn., Commercial Travelers, was held here when eleven new members were added to the rolls and officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows: M. S. Tornedall, senior counselor; J. S. Rice, junior counselor; H. J. Petersen, past counselor; B. Tornedall, secretary-treasurer; James Robson, conductor; W. E. Wakefield, page; G. V. Brown, sentinel; executive board, J. F. Schaeffer and E. Y. Gaither. A banquet was served following the business session.

Grainerd Bridge Completed.

Brainerd.—The bridge across the Crow Wing river, the cost of which was shared by the counties of Crow Wing, Northern and Cass, the townships of said Prairie and by contributions received by the Brainerd commercial club, has been completed with the exception of the approaches. These are fills which will be made by the farmers as soon as the frost leaves the ground. The building of this bridge removes a large trade area to Brainerd which formerly had to make a detour of twelve or more miles.

State Officials Fight.

St. Paul.—Petty bitterness, engendered by the accounts and expenditures committee's investigation of the state game and fish commission, reached a climax when Sam Fullerton, former executive agent of the commission, struck Harry H. Rider, present holder of that position, across the face with a cane. Mr. Rider, it appears at present, staggered under the blows from the heavy cane and blood spurted from his neck where a four-inch silver from the cane gouged deep into the flesh over the jugular vein.

AKELEY TO BE ENTERPRISING

Commercial Club and Farmers Decide Upon Establishment of Canning Factory.

Akeley.—The Akeley Commercial Club held a meeting of the business men and farmers living tributary to Akeley and, after a public discussion on the question, it was decided to establish a canning factory and have the same ready for business for the season of 1915. President Nelli, of the Brainerd Commercial clubs of Minnesota; A. E. Chamberlin, development commissioner of the Great Northern, and other prominent men were present.

T. B. Walker, of Minneapolis, owner of a greater part of the land immediately adjoining the townsite, was successfully urged by the Commercial Club to plat out the lands to small tracts of five and ten acres, to be cleared for raising produce for the proposed factory. The work of plotting was completed this week.

Akeley is a township of 2,700 and at one time it was thought the town would follow in the wake of other sawmill towns and become extinct after the mill completes sawing out the timber. The action of the Commercial Club will make possible a larger and more permanent business. There are sixty-seven lots within the radius of ten miles, and the lands are adapted to dairying and stock raising. A new creamery has recently been completed. The Commercial Club is now communicating with several contracting firms with a view to having them enter the cut-over lands for the new owners.

THROWN FROM BUGGY; DIES

Well Known Farmer Meets With Fatal Accident.

Marshall.—While driving home from Minneota, Al. Verschelde, a well known farmer, was thrown from his buggy when one of the wheels went over the edge of a culvert, and sustained injuries which resulted to his death.

The accident occurred at night, and Mr. Verschelde was rendered unconscious by the fall. When he partially recovered his senses, he walked to the home of Peter Wambeke, but the latter had retired and could not be aroused by the knocking. He was then found in a semi-conscious condition in Wambeke's barn early the following day and died shortly afterward.

Mr. Verschelde was thirteen miles from Minneota at the same manner two years ago while driving east from the same village. He was a native born here from Belgium about seven years ago.

Woman Alleges Persecution.

Mankato.—Charged with breaking a rural delivery mail box, Mrs. Emma Linkenbold appeared in court on Saturday brought before Benjamin Taylor of this city, United States court commissioner. According to the story which she told through the aid of an interpreter she says that she has been persecuted by neighbors ever since they located on their 135-acre farm, and it was in a fit of anger that she broke open the door of the mail box of a neighbor from her own fence and smashed it. She said that the neighbors have been trying to make it so hot for her and her husband that they will move away. She was permitted to return home on the understanding that she is to appear at the term of the federal court in this city April 22 if she is ordered. In the meantime Mrs. Linkenbold will be presented to United States District Attorney Heuit.

To Test Schmidt's Sanity.

Rochester.—Harold Schmidt, the youthful confessed slayer of Mrs. George Heisel of this county, will be examined in probate court for insanity. The date for the hearing has not been set. It is believed by those interested in the case that Schmidt is insane. His general conduct since his confinement and his continued declaration that he is not sorry for the deed, lead to this belief. He expressed a desire to attend the funeral of his aunt, but this was not granted. The funeral of Mrs. Heisel, the murdered woman, was held Friday at the house in which she was slain, and was attended by many neighbors from the countryside. Her brutal murder has caused a intense feeling in the neighborhood of Douglas.

Duluth Election in Doubt.

Duluth.—No one knows who has been elected mayor of Duluth. The unofficial returns received at the city clerk's office show that W. E. McEwen is a plurality of 23 votes over the lead ership of the Stock Yards National bank, and will discuss features of the bank and the growing industry in manner not unlike the analysis of the grain crop outlook, or production summaries, that the Minneapolis bulletins carry.

Bankers' associations are now considering the proposition for united advertising presented by the thirty-two bookers who met in Minneapolis. Individual bankers of North and South Dakota and Minnesota have taken up the work of inducing the farmers to bank more and to create a greater number of farm animals.

FORCED TO BORROW CLOTHES

"Meanest" Sneak Thief Steals Musician's Only Dress Coat and Vest, Causing Embarrassment.

Minneapolis.—Jean Koch, who is his sole living relative, has begun inquiries, had to appear at the Auditorium during the rendering of "Elijah" by the Apollo club recently, owing to the activity of a sneak thief, who broke into the house, in which he lives, the home of Peter Wambeke, but the latter had retired and could not be aroused by the knocking. He was then found in a semi-conscious condition in Wambeke's barn early the following day and died shortly afterward.

Mr. Verschelde was thirteen miles from Minneota at the same manner two years ago while driving east from the same village. He was a native born here from Belgium about seven years ago.

He expressed a desire to attend the funeral of his aunt, but this was not granted. The funeral of Mrs. Heisel, the murdered woman, was held Friday at the house in which she was slain, and was attended by many neighbors from the countryside. Her brutal murder has caused a intense feeling in the neighborhood of Douglas.

Duluth Election in Doubt.

Duluth.—No one knows who has been elected mayor of Duluth. The unofficial returns received at the city clerk's office show that W. E. McEwen is a plurality of 23 votes over the lead ership of the Stock Yards National bank, and will discuss features of the bank and the growing industry in manner not unlike the analysis of the grain crop outlook, or production summaries, that the Minneapolis bulletins carry.

Bankers' associations are now considering the proposition for united advertising presented by the thirty-two bookers who met in Minneapolis. Individual bankers of North and South Dakota and Minnesota have taken up the work of inducing the farmers to bank more and to create a greater number of farm animals.

K. of C. Doings in Winona.

Winona.—Knights of Columbus of Fraternal, La Crosse and Austin made united here in joint initiation. Attendant at the various festivities of the meeting were two bishops many of the leading knights of the Northwest and the delivered address of the order from the three cities participating. Bishop Schewe of the Winona diocese presided over the session and the conferring of the degrees in the pro-cathedral at high mass. At the banquet in the evening Bishop Heffron of Winona, Bishop O'Brien of St. Paul, N. M. Cronin of Minneapolis, Rev. Father O'Connor of Rochester and others spoke.

Police Find Man's Body.

Chisholm.—The body of John Fontana, who, according to the police, killed his wife with an ax, was found in four feet of water in the cellar of his home. Statewide search for the murderer started when the bodies of the coal police were poking about in the cellar water under the room where Mrs. Fontana's body was found. After they discovered the man's body in the basement part of the pool, the police believe that after committing the murder of his wife, Fontana drowned himself.

Woman Murdered With Ax.

Chisholm, Minn., April 3.—Mrs. John Fontana was murdered with an ax and her husband has since disappeared. There was no witnesses to the tragedy. When the woman's body was found, she had apparently been dead for some time. A pear-old baby was found crying on a nearby lot. An ax was found on the floor, and a heavy dust in the back of Mrs. Fontana's head indicated the cause of death. Fontana, the husband of the woman, was arrested last week on a charge of beating his wife.

LIVESTOCK EARNS $3,500,000

Record Sum Paid Northwestern Farmers at South St. Paul Stockyards in March.

St. Paul.—Farmers of the northwest got $3,500,000 for the cattle, hogs and sheep that they shipped in to the South St. Paul livestock market last month, according to an estimate of Secretary A. A. McKeithis of the St. Paul Stockyards company, which is the biggest March of record. The 2,000 carloads of stock that the railroads brought in did not make a record movement, but high prices brought up valuation totals.

J. J. Flanagan, J. S. Bangs and W. S. Bridges, South St. Paul bankers who have interested themselves in the suggestion of President E. W. Decker of the Northwestern National bank, Minneapolis, that farmers be induced to take more livestock, which was discussed at a luncheon of bankers in Minneapolis last month, are identified with the issuance of a livestock bulletin that will appear monthly hereafter. It will ha somewhat similar in the monthly circulars of the Security and Northwestern National banks of Minneapolis, but will appear as the bulletin of the Stock Yards National bank, and will discuss features of the growing industry in manner not unlike the analysis of the grain crop outlook, or production summaries, that the Minneapolis bulletins carry.

Bankers' associations are now considering the proposition for united advertising presented by the thirty-two bookers who met in Minneapolis. Individual bankers of North and South Dakota and Minnesota have taken up the work of inducing the farmers to bank more and to create a greater number of farm animals.

DOINGS OF THE SOLONS

Minnesota Legislative Affairs of the Past Week—Law Makers Hard at Work.

St. Paul, April 8.—The first cry of protest against the proposed income law shout in his exactc t by congress was sounded in the Minnesota legislature yesterday when a resolution was introduced condemning the proposition to reduce duties on form products.

Even as congress was meeting and hearing the farmers' protest against the proposed tariff law, former members in the Minnesota house and senate were asking that a resolution be sent to Minnesota members in congress and to the president protesting against the proposed reduction of duties on farm products.

In the senate Senator G. H. Sullivan introduced a resolution protesting against the 'removal of the duty on "flour" and the lowering of the duty on wheat. In his resolution he pointed out the fact that the removal of the duty on flour and other wheat products was practically equivalent to the taking off the duty on wheat as far as the effect on the price of wheat to the producer is concerned.

In the house Representatives and H. H. Duno introduced a resolution of protest. In both branches the resolutions were sent to the committee on rules of debate from Democratic members.

Senate Reduces Senators.

The farmers object to any reduction in farm products at this time, for they have been paying high duties on many manufactured products for the benefit of factory industries and they are just beginning to get some of the benefits intended by the tariff creed as a result. They object to taking off the duties on products that they sell rather in the raw or the manufactured state. They fear the influx of Canadian products. Such a move as is proposed will have even a worse effect than reciprocity.

Many Want New Judgeship.

In anticipation of the passage of a bill providing for the creation of a district another Judge, letters and indorsements are coming in in behalf of candidates for the place began pouring in on Governor Eberhart yesterday. The governor has considered one of the most desirable in the state.

In the indorsements filed, W. L. Kemble of Worthington is the favorite. He is closely pressed, however, by Nicholas Field and John Sisseo, both of the same city. They have fine chances for the creation of the new judgeship is assured.

Far Civil War Nurses.

The house Saturday afternoon sitting—as a committee of the whole—recommended to pass Senator J. D. Dennerly's bill providing women who served as nurses in the Civil war to enter the state soldiers' home.

Bill Is Killed.

St. Paul, April 5.—The Dunn roads bill was killed by the house yesterday with but three dissenting votes. Only a few amendments were also attached to the bill. "Bob" Dunn, author of the bill, said the house would not consider the bill again.

The bill, therefore, lacks only the signature of Governor Eberhart to make Senators James T. Elwell of Minneapolis, Hugo Rogge of Waconia, Ivy and Hansen of Normen voted against the bill. Senator Elwell, in explaining his vote said he could not agree with the general policy of the bill.

The bill is a direct result of a 1-mill tax levied on all the property in the state for the last election. "Bob" Dunn is the author of the 1-mil tax amendment in the constitution.

Strictly Legislative Inquiry.

The house committee on public accounts and expenditures has reported on a bill providing for a strictly legislative investigation of the various state departments and recommend a plan of procedure for the next legislature. The commission is to be composed of four members, to be appointed by the governor, the senate and house two to be appointed by the president of the senate and two by the speaker. It is expected to the governor to gain his consent to the plan before the bill is put under advisement until today, but he intimated that he would assent. Although the bill will be reported, some approval of the committee, C. L. Bowyer reserved his right to offer an amendment on the floor of the house, which would place the state prison farms from outside the legislature on the investigating committee.

Many Bright Bill Retained.

The Finke daylight saloon bill was killed in the senate yesterday by a legislature yesterday by a vote of 52 to 50. Sixty-one votes were necessary to carry it. A motion to reconsider the action, but an adjournment was taken by the Pearl Mineste, to allow a meeting of the appropriating committee.

Referendum in Governor.

The initiative' and referendum bill now only lacks the governor's signature to become one of the amendments to be submitted to the people at this next general election. The senate yesterday followed the lead of the house in adopting the report of the special conferences committee which smothered out the differences in the bill passed by the senate and the one passed by the house. The bill will be engrossed and finally signed by the governor on Monday.

The London bill providing a stringent regulation of dance halls has been passed by the lower house. There were only three dissenting votes. Moonlight dances and shadow glides in public dance halls are forbidden by the clause which prohibits turning down or dimming of the lights.

Just a few hours after its legislature had finally approved the initiative and referendum bill, establishing the principle that every voter in Minnesota has an equal right to vote on legislatio, the state senate passed the "seven senator" amendment, destined to give the rural districts control of the cities. The "seven senator" bill is the one law that the people had a chance to adopt at the last general election.

Despita the fact that he people voted on the amendment at the last election, the senate voted yesterday afternoon to reauthrh the measure to the people. There were 23 votes for the bill, one more then enough to pass it.

St. Paul, April 4.—Legislators accepted the capitol yesterday and went to the assembly to act upon the last of the inside workings of the big institution. Governor Eberhart was also on hand.

Workmen's Compensation Law.

Minnesota will have an adequate workmen's compensation law if the house follows the lead of the senate, which passed several perfecting amendments to the measure to the great joy of the labor people. There were 23 votes for the bill, 1 more than enough to pass it.

The bill, which is largely a copy of the Wisconsin law, was put through by Senators Rockne, G. H. Sullivan, Boyle, Schaller and Pioseen, acting as the committee on labor and the senate sitting during the recess. This committee held many hearings at which employers and employee alike appeared.

The bill as reported by the committee was passed with but one amendment. This amendment was proposed by Senator John Mooren of Waseca. Senator Schaller had a slight amendment to the proposal of Senator Mooren. Under the amendment, an employer can shift his responsibility to a casualty or insurance company, provided, however, in the event the insurance company be unable to meet its obligations with a claim may then cause it to revart to the employer.

Governor Is Accepted.

The house last night adopted the report of the conference committee on the initiative and referendum bill. The bill was then repassed by an overwhelming majority, as was expected in the senate today, and the bill will be sent to the governor for his signature early Saturday.

W. I. Nolan, chairman of the house conference committee, declared that the passage of the bill at present was not just what he desired, it probably was the best that could be secured and for that reason had the unanimous support of the committee.

"Rates on all brick have been cut on the average from 30.23 per cent. to 10.24 per cent., tile from 47.84 per cent. to 23.62 per cent., sewer pipe from 57.05 per cent. to 9.82 per cent. Ordinary building stone, which was already really relatively low, being subject an average duty of 24.67 per cent., has not been cut at all. Cement, lime and stone will drop from 36.18 per cent. to 17.98 per cent. The schedule contains a number of articles on which either no rate was given or the rate was excessive provided for

THE LAST LOG DRIVE

Two Million Feet are now Being Taken Over the Dam.

What is probably the last log drive to go down the Red Lake river is now being taken over the Marshall dam. There are about two million feet in the drive and it is expected that the tail of the drive will be put over the dam at St. Hilaire today and in three or four days the last of the drive will have gone over the dam here. The drive is being handled with little difficulty because of the high stage of the water.

MANY VISIT EXHIBITS

Much Interest Shown in Art Display at the Court House.

The exhibits of the state art society on display at the court house this week are attracting many visitors, having been inspected by more than two hundred people daily. There is no charge to see the exhibits and all are invited to see them. Those who visit the exhibits will find their time well spent.

The north-west basement room of the court house, where the exhibits are displayed will be open every afternoon this week. The room will also be open on Sunday afternoon from 2 to 4 o'clock.

The most prominent educators in the state, have expressed their appreciation of the great benefits of the proper kind of art instruction, and of the work which the state art society is doing in bringing the best pictures before the people. Not that these educators believe that all pupils should be latruisted to be "artists" in the commonly accepted meaning of the term—they do not believe any such thing. But they have realized the great effect which instruction in the fundamental art principles has on the development of a child's mind, habits and character.

"Education in art and in appreciation of beautiful things," said Professor Vincent recently, "is coming to be recognized as not incidental to life, but as fundamental to true living. The school has therefore a duty to the community in improving upon it the real study of art in all its forms. The co-operation of the school men of the state with the Minnesota state art society may, I am sure, be counted upon."

Superintendent Schultz has expressed himself similarly. "This enterprise on the part of the state art society," he said, "should meet with the hearty support of school patrons and educational leaders in each community where the exhibit is made. I am sure it can be made valuable in connection with school work, as well as in developing a better understanding and greater interest in art and industrial training."

WILL HOLD SPECIAL CITY ELECTION

TO VOTE ON PROPOSITION TO ISSUE REFUNDING BONDS.

PROPOSED TO TAKE UP CITY'S FLOATING INDEBTEDNESS.

An important special city election is to be held on Monday, May 12, to vote on the proposition to issue and negotiate the city's refunding bonds in the sum of $14,000.

That there is a large floating indebtedness has been a matter of common knowledge. It has been ascertained by people who have been recently checking up the city's books that the total amount of the city's floating indebtedness, including interest, is $14,000. The evidences of this debt are city warrants that are not only interest bearing but must be discounted when negotiated.

It is proposed to take up all of these outstanding warrants and handle the city's business on a cash basis in the future. Though it is very unfortunate that the city's floating indebtedness is so large, it is a situation that should be met squarely and every good citizen should vote for the bonds that the city finances may be put on a business basis.

SCHOOL AID INCREASE

Provisions of New Law Will Interest Patrons of Local High School.

A new law, passed by the legislature now in session and signed by the governor, provides for an increase in the amount of special state aid granted to schools of the state in which the Red Lake Falls state high school belongs.

The local high school has been drawing $1000 annually in special state aid because of the work offered in agriculture, manual training and home economics. The new law provides for an increase of the special state aid to $1800 annually.

There will also be an increase in the special state aid drawn because of the maintenance of a normal training department, the amount of the aid being increased from $760 to $1000.

The present legislature has also approved an act increasing the annual aid for high schools from $1,750 to $2,300 and for graded schools from $600 to $750. This increase does not apply to the present school year, but will be included in the distribution of aid in 1914. The same rule applies to the increase in the industrial aid from $1,000 to $1,800, and that for training departments from $760 to $1,000. For the present school year the special aid will be allowed on the basis of the amounts provided in the old law.

HOUSE BURNED.

Fritz Gehrke Suffered Loss Monday Night.

It was a fire that did not cause much excitement in the city that destroyed the house and most of the household goods of Fritz Gehrke Monday night.

The fire was discovered by members of the family shortly before midnight. They had gone to bed and were awakened at that hour by the smell of smoke. They were able to get out only a few articles of the household effects before the building was all ablaze. The house was a large one and it did not take it long to burn. It was located in the extreme eastern limits of the city and no alarm was turned in.

The loss is partly covered by insurance in the amount of $400.

MAPS FOR SCHOOLS

United States Geographical Survey Will Make Special Publication For Use of Any School.

For teaching the geography of the United States in the public schools there is a great need of a map that is made by the United States Geological Survey, and which is not a U. S. Government topographic maps. These maps contain many details of local interest, showing even the school houses and farmhouses as well as every wagon road, with which, of course, the children are familiar. In fact, that it is said to be an easy matter for the teacher to gain the interest of the pupils in this new type of school map. The scientific characteristics of the particular things represented by these maps are such that a successful session of short steps to lead the pupils to an appreciation of the different types of topography. The topographic sheets of other sections of the United States are also of great interest. In the sheets of the Geological Survey of recent issue are printed on the scale of 1 mile to 1 inch, a scale which brings out many features of all the country in very interesting detail.

With these maps the pupils can determine the altitude of their homes and the steepness of hills and mountains, estimate the grades of wagon roads, work out simple engineering problems such as the drainage of swamps, select good sites for the location of reservoirs to supply water to imaginary towns and cities, ascertain by imaginary trolley or railroad lines the most direct and the most feasible routes, establish locations of mines and the like, and search for the control of forest fires, and many similar problems.

The Geological Survey has published many topographic atlas sheets covering about 40 per cent of the United States, and the scale of 62 from any teacher it will supply 50 different maps, each with questions in reference to the particular requirements of the class in hand. It proposed to instruct in this new kind of geographic study. The atlas will include, besides the map covering the area where the school is situated (provided such a map is published), other maps showing all the physiographic types of the country and the United States—seacoast areas, hilly country, high mountainous areas, plain country, swampy areas, regions of mountainous lakes, maps showing the deep forests, areas with woodlands interspersed with many streams and lakes, and other natural features.

If less than 50 pupils are enrolled, a special selection of a less number will be made. Each set of maps will furnished at the retail rate of 10 cents a copy. The maps are printed in tints which is on the 1-mile scale covers about 225 square miles, or 165,000 acres, have been made at a cost for surveying and engraving of $2 each, and the wholesale price of 6 cents apiece covers only about the cost of paper and printing. The areas were surveyed and the maps published by a commission of experts (in three sections), for 60 cents The map is furnished in any number order as part of the $2. Applications and remittances should be made to the director of the United States Geological Survey, Washington, D. C., who will promptly fill all orders.

INJURED MAN DID NOT SURVIVE

MR. CASSAVAN DIED IN CROOKSTON HOSPITAL FEW HOURS AFTER OPERATION.

Napoleon Cassavan, who was severely wounded in a fight last winter with an excited stallion on Wednesday or last week, died in a Crookston hospital early Friday morning.

Mr. Cassavan was taken to Crookston Thursday evening and shortly after his arrival at the hospital his right eye was removed. The operation did not seem to tax his vitality accordingly. In fact the arm had been so nearly severed by the horse that its amputation was a simple task.

However, the patient had lost so much blood and his system had been subjected to such a strain during the encounter with the horse that his vitality was very low and he passed away shortly after midnight.

Mr. Cassavan is survived by his widow and six children.

LAWMAKERS PUT IN LIVELY WEEK

SPECTACULAR FEATURES AS CLOSING DAYS DRAW NEAR.

(Special Correspondence.)

St. Paul, April 21.—The close of the legislative session, which is almost here-in the week in the house, is due to add several interesting pages to Minnesota history as far as a review of its lawmaking bodies is concerned. Not in a decade has so many spectacular things been crowded into one brief week or five legislative days as in the week just passed. After weeks of jockeying the house put over the new primary law, which wipes out party lines in the matter of legislative and county offices. The senate day both house and senate received a slap on the wrist from Governor Eberhart in the shape of a veto of the Nolan bill permitting home rule in the handling of public utilities and the very next day the governor was handed a return slap in the announcement that the veto was not worth the paper it was written upon. He had slipped a day and held the bill too long, the landers charged.

The week has been the last of the session of the legislature and it is no idle boast, either. The time has been written on good white paper, with his signature attached, and it is destined to be two bodies pass a public utilities bill. This might be called excitement enough for one week, but when one adds the fact that the house has also passed a workmen's compensation act, two of the biggest measures of the session, it can be readily seen that the solons have sure been earning their money.

The veto by Governor Eberhart of the Nolan bill, which gives municipalities control of all public utilities within their confines with the exception of telephones, was the first of the session. The bill was principally designed for Duluth, where local control of the electric light and gas companies and the street car monopoly has long been a bone of contention. It was not his veto of the bill, however, that brought the two houses up standing, but a little postscript declaring that if the legislature did not pass a public utilities commission bill the governor would convene a special session for statewide control instead of local control as named in the Nolan act he would call a special session of the legislature for the particular purpose.

Again it is all the more unusual as the object of the gubernatorial wrath being the Nolan bill, which passed the senate the next day. This measure was promptly vetoed by the governor and the legislature's ability to bow to all local wrestling fans. Suter also has won a name in the wrestling game and will probably be a good match for the Halstad grappler.

WRESTLING MATCH

Curtis of Halstad and Suter of Chicago in Mat Contest at Lotus.

A big wrestling match is scheduled to be pulled off at the opera house the next Thursday night, May 1. The participants will be Loren Curtis, of Halstad and Otto Suter, of Chicago. Both men have won reputations in the ring. Curtis' ability is well known to all local wrestling fans. Suter also has won a name in the wrestling game and will probably be a good match for the Halstad grappler.

SOW STRONG SEED

Low Germination Power of Alfalfa, Corn, Red Clover, Alsike Clover, Millet and Orchard Grass Seed.

W. L. Oswald, in charge of the University Farm Seed Laboratory at St. Paul, says after making hundreds of tests, that farmers should watch carefully the seed planted this season. Little has been tested about a great variation in germinating power of seed corn. It averages 75 per cent, while the seed sown should not sverage less than 90 per cent. One hundred twelve samples of seed corn showed an average germinating power of 83 per cent, or just a little more than the 90 to 95 percent usually required of good seed.

Thirty-nine samples of timothy tested averaged 88 per cent, but two of these samples of old seed failed to germinate at all. Among the seeds that germinated as well as can reasonably be required for planting were flax, sweet clover, western red clover, white clover, alsike clover, flax, rye and wheat.

Red top and orchard grass both showed very low tests, and brome grass was the highest before standard.

Every former should either test for himself or send samples to the Seed Laboratory, University Farm, St. Paul, to be tested.—J. O. Rankin, University Farmer.

OKLEE WILL BE DRY; BROOKS STAYS WET

OKLEE BUSINESS PEOPLE PROTESTED AGAINST ESTABLISHMENT OF SALOON.

In the spring election the town of Poplar River established the townsite of Brooks and the town of Lambert containing the townsite of Oklee went "wet" by a small majorities. Attorney Paquin applied to the board of county commissioners for a license to sell intoxicating liquors at Oklee and Paul Leroux asked for a license to continue in the liquor business at Brooks.

Hearings on the applications were held before the board of county commissioners in session Friday. A delegation of several Oklee business men appeared before the board and protested vigorously against the granting of a license to Brooks and to Oklee. They said the people there were unanimously united against the establishment of a saloon. Recognizing this expression of sentiment of the people of the town, the board rejected the application.

Though there was no objection to the granting of a license for the Brooks saloon, the board was divided on the proposition and there was a very lively debate. The license finally voted to grant the license, though by the chair's casting vote the board would "go dry".

DEATH OF VETERAN.

John Alexander Houston, Father of J. D. and C. B. Houston.

The following sketch of John A. Houston, father of J. D. and C. B. Houston, a prominent pioneer of the death was made in the last issue of the Stephen Sentinel, a paper of Grant County Herald, published at Hectum:

Monday morning word was given out that John A. Houston had passed and answered the last summons and crossed over the dark river to rest in the age of 71 years 4 months 11 days. The immediate cause of Mr. Houston's death was a gradual decline, having been confined to the greater part of the past year to the house, and has been unable to get around by himself. Mr. Houston was born at Black Creek, allegany county, New York, January 3, 1842, of Scotch parentage. He came west to Racine, Wisconsin at an early age, while residing in that state he met and was married April 26, 1866, to Miss Mary Elizabeth Phillips at Hammond, Wisconsin, they lived in that state until 1869 when they came to Minnesota where he took up a homestead in Aurora, Grant county and has lived in various parts of the county to the day of his death and has always followed farming. He was a resident until 1901 when he moved to and purchased the farm where he resided at the time of his death and has always been made Herman his permanent place of residence ever since. Mr. Houston during the civil war was a man of sterling character and one who worked for the advancement of the community and the welfare of the people with whom he chose to cast his lot. He served throughout the civil war with the 1 and 16th regiments of the state of Wisconsin, and under General Thomas at the battle of Chickamuga, was wounded and laid on the battle field for five days, was with General Sherman in his memorable march to the sea, was mustered out at Washington the close of the war. BILL AIMED AT JAPS

CALIFORNIA LAND BILL SARS ALL NOT INTENDING TO BE CITIZENS.

NO STATED DISCRIMINATION

Designed to Prevent Japanese From Acquiring Title to State Property—Tokio Paper Takes Extreme Attitude.

Sacramento, Cal., April 17.—An anti-alien land ownership bill, designed primarily to prevent Japanese from acquiring title to real estate property within the state, but so worded as to prohibit any aliens from owning land more than one year, except upon a declaration of his intention to become a citizen, was just passed by the lower house of the legislature by a vote of 60 to 12. After two hours had been spent in debating the proposed amendments, the bill went to a roll call without a word of argument.

Drafted as Substitute.

The measure was drafted by a sub-committee of the judiciary committee as a substitute for a bill previously introduced, oil of which specifically provided that "aliens ineligible to citizenship should not hold lands." The committee, however, proceeded on the theory that such a statute might be held in violation of the treaty rights of Japan subjects, and broadened the measure to indicate all aliens who had not declared their intention of becoming citizens.

Corporations Cared For.

In order not to embarrass foreign corporations, the committee did not make the corporation clause of the bill, section 8, apply only to "aliens not eligible to citizenship."

Section 3—No alien shall acquire title to or own real property within this state, or take the same by descent, devise or purchase, except as provided in this act.

Section 2—An alien may acquire title to real property by devise, descent or purchase and hold the same for one year from the date of so acquiring title; and if any alien at the date of so acquiring title be a minor, he may hold such title for one year after attaining his majority. At the expiration of said period real property so held by an alien shall escheat to the state of California as hereinafter provided, unless during the period of one year after acquiring such title, or, in the case of a minor, during the period of one year after attaining his majority, such alien shall become a citizen of the United States, or shall declare his intention, according to law, to become such a citizen.

Enforcement by Court.

Section 3—Provides for the enforcement of the provisions of the bill through the courts by district attorneys in each county, or by the attorney general, should any district attorney fail to act. It stipulates that the burden of proof shall be upon the owner of land involved.

Section 6—This act shall not apply to real property now owned by aliens, so long as the same shall be held by the present owners, their wives or children, and the right, title or interest in or to any real property hereafter acquired in good faith and held by the same shall not be questioned or impeached by reason of the alienage of any person through whom such title may have been derived.

Section 7—Provides that no leasing contracts on real estate for agricultural purposes or city property shall be made for terms of more than five years with "such aliens."

SUSTAIN STOCK RATE

CUT IN SWINE DUTY AND INCREASE ON BARLEY ALSO DEFEATED.

COMMITTEE DUTIES ARE KEPT

Agriculture Schedule Is Considered for Hours—Some of the Arguments Presented.

Washington, April 15.—Persistent efforts to put cattle and sheep on the free list do not die out in the duty on swine and to otherwise alter the ways and means committee tariff program were defeated in the Democratic caucus of the house.

The Democratic leadership fight for the bill as reported was piloted by Representative Francis Burton Harrison, son of New York in the absence of Representative Underwood the majority leader, who is ill. On the senate side of congress, the tariff revisionists are also active.

The agricultural schedule was before the house caucus for hours and there were some lively speeches. Many of the new members of the house aired their views, but each time there was a test the committee was overwhelmingly sustained.

Logue Precipitated Fight.

Representative Logue of Pennsylvania, a new member, precipitated the biggest fight of the day with an amendment to put cattle on the free list. Cattle and sheep are now dutiable at 10 per cent and swine at $1.50 a head. Representative Baker of California, Russell of Missouri, and others urged against free cattle, declaring that it would destroy the cattle raising industry in their states.

Representative Kinkead of New Jersey and Curtis of Massachusetts contended free cattle would mean a broader field of supply for the independent packers as against the so-called beef trust.

Representative Curtis declared that the United States might soon cease to be an exporter of food. He said the Argentine Republic has a population of only 5,000,000 as against 92,000,000 in the United States, exported more than five times as much beef and meat products as the United States and that tariff protection in America could only benefit the "trust."

To Be Thrown Out.

Representative Garner of Texas, a member of the ways and means committee, said cattle last year raised a tariff revenue of $1,200,000, that the rate had been so adjusted in the bill that it would raise $500,000 the first year, if the cattle were transferred to the free list, he added, the rest of the tariff would have to be adjusted to meet the loss of revenue.

Representative Kinkead of New Jersey forced a roll call, the first since the bill has been before the caucus and the free cattle amendment was rejected, 72 to 139.

Representative Burke of Wisconsin unsuccessfully sought to reduce the duty on swine from $1.50 to 75 cents a head and the motion by Representative Kinkead to put sheep on the free list was voted down, 62 to 98.

A long debate on the proposed rates on barley made by the Democratic members of ways and Means, was also unsuccessful.

POPE'S CONDITION IS GRAVE

PIUS HAS ANOTHER RELAPSE—TEMPERATURE REACHES 102.

Physician, However, Declares Patient's Condition Is Generally Satisfactory.

Rome, April 17.—Once again there has been sudden change for the worse in the condition of Pope Pius X. It is changes such as this that have repeatedly transformed the feeling of optimism regarding the pope's recovery into one of grave anxiety, in the knowledge that such successes only draw something from the vital forces of the holy father.

Notwithstanding the reassurances of Professor Marchiafava, a careful watch is being kept on the vatican and there is doubt that the "satisfactory general conditions" of the pontiff, as reported by the doctors, is borne out by the facts.

The temperature of the pope, which throughout almost the whole day remained at 97 degrees, in itself increasing depression and weakness, rose in the early evening to 100, and later to 102. The bronchial symptoms, which at the morning examination were found to be diminished, presented new and grave features. The affected zone on the left side of the chest was further congested, with a possible area of consolidation—one of the signs of pneumonia—and the sounde within the bronchial tubes were more pronounced.

The arrival in Rome of Angelo Sarto, the pope's brother, was interpreted in some quarters as a certain sign that all hope had been abandoned. However, Sarto left his own village on his journey to the holy city when the condition of the pope had greatly improved.

OIL MAGNATES TO BE SUED

Seeks to Recover $100,000,000 On the Ground That Trust Still Exists.

New York, April 16.—With the entering of subpoenas on John D. Archbald, it was learned that the state of New York will begin suit to dissolve the oil interests to recover approximately $100,000,000 for alleged violation of the anti-trust statutes of that state. The substance of the allegations of the attorney general of Texas is that the Standard Oil companies of New Jersey, New York, Indiana, Ohio and Indiana, are practically under the one control. In short, it is set forth that the "Standard Oil trust" has simply changed its name and its Petroleum company as its Texas branch.

Washington, April 16.—A proposed increase by the Rock Island road on rates on wheat and corn, it seats a hundred pounds from Omaha and other Missouri river points to Wisconsin destinations, where the grain would be milled for shipment East has been suspended by the interstate commerce commission until Aug. 13, pending investigation.

Ohio Failing At Cairo.

Cairo, Ill., April 15.—The Ohio river here registers 52.9 feet. It is thought the water will be over 53 feet by Friday morning. The citizens' patrol of the city is being maintained until the river falls below fifty feet.

Police Searching for Slayer.

Chicago, April 16.—The entire force of detectives of this city is searching for the slayer of George Dietz, the wealthy bachelor who was found dead with his skull crushed by a hammer in his home. Thirty detectives are scouring the Italian quarters for a peddler who he said to have been seen several times recently near the Dietz home and to have expressed a grievance against him. The letter left by the murderer asserted that he was the avenger of an injured girl, relatives rather than aids the police.

Three Canadians Asphyxiated.

Winnipeg, Man., April 16.—While the Gunn building on Jarvis avenue was being fumigated to drive out cock-roaches, the deadly fumes of the acid used, penetrated into Turkish bath rooms nearby and two bathers and an attendant were asphyxiated. Their bodies were found by another attendant. The dead are: Nicholas Warnock, Constantine Dertan, and George Cobblaidis, attendant. George Hartman, operator, has been placed under arrest.

TRY TO KILL ALFONSO

THREE SHOTS FIRED BEFORE WOULD-BE ASSASSIN IS OVERPOWERED.

SHOWED PRESENCE OF MIND

Spurs Horse Which Rears and Receives Ball Aimed at Rider—Third Time Attempted.

Madrid, April 15.—For the third time in his reign, King Alfonso narrowly escaped being the victim of an anarchist attempt against his life. Three shots were fired at the king yesterday afternoon in the streets of the capital by a native of Barcelona, Rafael Sanchez Allegre, who was immediately overpowered.

His Escape.

King Alfonso owes his escape to his own courage, quickness, and skilled horsemanship. Accompanied by his staff he was riding along the Calle do Alcala, returning from the ceremony of swearing in recruits, when a man sprang from the sidewalk and seized the bridle of the king's horse with one hand, presenting a revolver point blank with the other.

The king, realizing the situation, with lightning rapidity dug his spurs into his horse, which reared violently. His quickness saved his life. The bullets, stead of burying itself in the king's breast struck the horse on the neck, and so close was it that the king's left hand glove was blackened by the powder discharge.

Is Overpowered.

Before his assailant was able to pull the trigger again, a secret service man sprang upon him. The two men fell to the ground, locked in each other's arms, struggling furiously. The assassin managed to free his revolver arm and fired two more shots in rapid succession, but the officer knocked his arm aside and the bullets flew harmlessly through the air.

At the sound of the first shot, the king's staff forced their horses off the sidewalk and made a ring around the assailant, but before, fiercely in the grip of four policemen before he was overpowered and handcuffed.

King Addresses Crowd.

King Alfonso, as soon as he saw that the man had been secured, raised himself in his stirrups, turned to the crowd, gave a military salute, and shouted in a ringing voice: "Long Live Spain!"

He then dismounted and reassured his staff, saying: "It is nothing, gentlemen."

Then uprose a mighty roar from the people, which grew louder and rolled along in great waves of sound, all the way, as the king rode to the palace, each uncovered and smiling.

A spectator, a pensioner royal habitue, pushed forward so impetuously to offer his congratulations to the king that he was mistaken for one of the baly father.

Notwithstanding the reassurances of Professor Marchiatava, a careful watch is being kept on the vatican and there is doubt that the "satisfactory general conditions" of the pontiff, as reported by the doctors, is borne out by the facts.

The temperature of the pope, which throughout almost the whole day remained at 97 degrees, in itself increasing depression and weakness, rose in the early evening to 100, and later to 102. The bronchial symptoms, which at the morning examination were found to be diminished, presented new and grave features. The affected zone on the left side of the chest was further congested, with a possible area of consolidation—one of the signs of pneumonia—and the sounde within the bronchial tubes were more pronounced.

The arrival in Rome of Angelo Sarto, the pope's brother, was interpreted in some quarters as a certain sign that all hope had been abandoned. However, Sarto left his own village on his journey to the holy city when the condition of the pope had greatly improved.

KUKUHUUS LITTLE KNOWN

Mysterious Race Who Live in New Guinea, Refuse to Meet Europeans in their Camps.

London.—Dr. Bruno Beheim gives the following description of the mysterious and little known race of the Kukuhuhus of New Guinea: The Kukuhuhus live in a part of English territory through which runs the River Quikeams and which is situated near the German boundary. This territory is looked upon by the said race as their inalienable birthright, and every usurper is regarded with hostile eyes. No European has been able to meet the Kukuhuhus in their dwelling places. Prospectors and English officials have made repeated attempts to approach them, but their camps were invariably found empty, often with the camp fires still burning.

Many a time have Europeans left presents highly prized by other natives, such as corals, red cloth, looking glasses, axes, etc., in the deserted camps, in the hope of establishing friendly relations with these people. But on returning to the same places a few day or a few weeks later, although the camp showed recent traces of occupation, such as live cinders and fresh footprints, the goods intended for presents remained untouched where they had been placed.

Other races of New Guinea fear the Kukuhuhus as cannibals. They have learned to their cost what it means when the headsmen, whose daggers peer for all time, while others are found dead, laden through their gaping wounds. The Kukuhuhus, however, do a bartering trade with other natives in the same locality. The latter bring salt, earthenware, dried fish, etc., and deposit them in a certain indicated place. They then retire for a few hours, being notified to do so by a curious code of signs. Then the timid mountain dwellers are allowed to view the goods offered for sale. If they want them they put other articles, such as skins, feathers and other jungle produce next to those articles wanted by them. They then retire to the rear, and when the way seems clear the coast dwellers approach again. If the latter are satisfied with what is offered in exchange they take it. This goods put there by the mountain people and go away; if not satisfied they retire again as before with empty hands. Such business transactions between wild races are said to be carried on for decades carefully thought.

Doctor Beheim regards the Kukuhuhus as the most remarkable of the ethnological wonders of New Guinea, and he was not successful in discovering the secret of their origin.

LIFE FOR THEFT OF BACON

An Ohio Convict Went Insane Before Pardon Came—May Spend Days in Asylum.

Columbus, O.—William Welch, thirty-four years old, the man who received a life sentence in the penitentiary for stealing a piece of bacon, is no longer a convict. Governor Cox announced his pardon. But the governor could not work his benevolence, which has fled after five years in prison. It is likely that the unfortunate man will have to spend the remainder of his days in an asylum.

Six years ago Welch, a New York City waif, was caught with a piece of bacon, valued at seven cents, which he had stolen from a farmer at Greenspring station, in the state. He was hungry and unable to obtain work.

He pleaded guilty to the charge of burglary, believing that leniency would be shown him. Instead, Judge Kinkead gave him a life term.

Application for his pardon was signed by Judge Allread and the prosecuting attorney.

DENTIST WEDS APPLE EATER

Dr. Thomas Allen, Who Lived Two Months on Fruit, Bridegroom in Missouri.

Dr. Allen, former president of Aurora college, who lived for two months on peanuts, and Miss Lillian Sushr of Ottawa, who is said to have existed 18 days on apples, were married in Eureka Springs, Mo., where Dr. Allen is proprietor of a health resort.

The bridegroom is fifty years old, his bride is twenty years of age.

The bride was a stenographer for years for Asa O'Kell Brown, Ottawa lawyer. She went to Eureka Springs last fall for the benefit of her health, and there met Dr. Allen.

Dr. Allen four years ago read that a boy in Texas lived on part of the state had died from eating peanuts.

"Why, that must be wrong; I could live 60 days on raw peanuts," he said.

His statement was challenged, and he went on the exclusive peanut diet to prove his contention.

Major C. J. Ross D.S.O.

W. Robert Foran

COPYRIGHT BY HOCHAY CO

I MUST confess that of all the picturesque figures it has been my happy lot to meet during the course of my 12 years of world-wandering, none stands as prominently in my recollections as Maj. C. J. Ross, member of the British army and companion of the Distinguished Service order, and now an assistant game warden in British East Africa.

I first saw the major in South Africa, and I got to know him, as few other men know him, while we were both serving the British East African government. This friendship between us is one, for my own part, which years can not lessen.

What a history the man has back of his forty-odd years! What a name he has won for himself on the field of battle and in politics duties! It seems almost impossible to tell all he has seen, accomplished and endured. Perhaps one day some one will venture to record in book form the many deeds of daring this frail-looking Australian has to his credit. It would be a mighty task, but the result should be worthy of the effort, for I know of few men who have more material to draw upon, vivid true-to-life happenings in a varied career of excitement.

Ross was born in Australia way back in the seventies or may be the sixties. Emigrating to America when still a boy, he held first one post and then another, until finally he settled to Canada and enlisted in the world famous Canadian mounted police.

Sometimes, if you can get him into a talkative mood, he will tell you of aiding many men to capture dangerous criminals, wanted. Indeed, Ross with a smile that he was never known to fail on one of these hazardous undertakings if you look at his face, you can understand why this is so. It is not easy to get him to talk, but fortunately his record is so well known that it is not a difficult matter to gather material on his life.

I remember one day when we went in camp together to East Africa—keeping law and order in a new dominoed field rush, which turned out a fizzle—Ross began to talk after dinner of some of his adventures with the gun-men and illicit liquor men in the northwest of Canada.

He told us of one day capturing a band of four bandits, who were notorious for the number of men they had killed. Ross was sent out with a trooper to capture them alive if possible. Ye gods! think of it! Two men to capture four worst men in Canada! The two men rode across the plains for several days until they finally came upon the camp of the bandits.

"We got 'em," ended Ross. Being pressed for further particulars, he reluctantly told us a few details of the capture.

"Our arrival was a surprise," he continued. "I walked into their camp accompanied by my trooper. Neither of us had drawn a gun. Bandits or no bandits, they all know they can't fool the N. W. M. Police. One darned fool drew a gun, but I'm always quick with my pea-shooter and winged him. The others submitted, and we brought 'em back to the chief. It was sure some soft soap, that. The poor fellow I had shot was buried where he fell by his comrades. They didn't like doing it, but a dead man covering you makes a man do what he's ordered. Leastwise, it always has in my experience."

It is only by looking into his eyes and catching the lines of his mouth, hidden partially by a heavy mustache, that one can see that behind this hardened exterior lurks a heart full of kindness for a comrade in distress. Strange to relate he is a power with women, all women like him, and he himself loves the society of the gentler sex. In the summer of 1910 Ross was happily married in London and has taken his wife back to East Africa with him. Many a fair lady's heart will be jealous of the woman who has become Mrs. Ross.

One day, when riding together across the Athi Plains, Ross told me that he had spent some years in Utah. I asked him if he was a Mormon.

Sure thing, young feller. I'm a blab op in the church," he laughed, and the merry twinkle in his eye warned me that a little coaxing might bring out a good story. And presently he told me about his stay to Salt Lake City.

"I gotten rue out of there. I mis-remember what the Mormon religion is sure some fine thing, your wives save up all the prizes-leg-end chickens and corn and coax you to favor them. I don't believe in no surfragette; Mormon ladies for mine." Say, I guess you better join that outfit. All you gotta do is to stand up one day in the Tabernacle and announce that you've had a revelation for Sister Jane, and she becomes a number five or whatever number is next vacant in your catalogue. I never had some mighty fine revelations in Salt Lake City, though. Say, young feller, I'll appoint you a deacon in the church."

But somehow I felt I was being "joshed," for the twinkle in Ross' eyes belied his words. But ever other he called me "Deacon," and often would whether he told his bride about his Mormon proclivities. I rather fancy he would, for he was not a man to hide a joke, nor to hide a trifle.

After leaving the northwest mounted police, Ross came back to the States and enlisted, after considering, for some Indian campaign. He also fought through the Red River war. His career was varied to a marked degree until the South African war broke out.

Ross joined the Canadian mounted rifles and went out to South Africa with them as a trooper. He saw considerable service with them, but evenly ually got into trouble through an excessive fondness for looting. He was dropped from the force and in immediately went to Pretoria and joined another irregular corps as a lieutenant. His wonderful scouting and daring stood for him the notice of Lord Kitchener, who had a private interview with the great British general. This was enough to make an irregular corps of cavalry. He called the Canadian Scouts, and they soon was born a little corps which wrote his name big in the annals of the greatest war of modern times.

Ross gathered together a number of kindred spirits and soon had a regiment of scouts which would be hard to equal, let alone beat. They were all men who had traveled, who were used to search of adventure, men who feed death daily and laughed at eyes, and who knew no hardship too difficult to endure or overcome. With such material is it to be wondered at that the Canadian Mounted Scouts were soon heard of?

They fought in every part of the Transvaal, Orange River Colonies and Cape Colony. The Boers trembled at the mere mention of the name of Ross. It would take a book to write the history of their deeds of marvelous daring. They were in all created in their warfare, either.

Perhaps the most famous episode in their adventurous exploits was the shooting of 15 Boer prisoners, whom they had captured when wearing the British uniform. This act was against all usages of modern warfare, and in defence of the acts of The Hague and Geneva, the Boers were liable for their breach of law to be tried by a drumhead court-martial, with death as the penalty if found guilty.

Ross is a man of quick action. He had caught the men in the act of the crime and wearing the uniforms. That was enough. He dispensed with the drumhead-court-martial and sentenced them to death by shooting. He selected three of his most trusted followers to assist him in the execution of the Boers. Then he sent in the reminder of his regiment, warning them to take no notice of any shooting they might hear in the course of the next few minutes. He waited until they were out of sight and then turned to the cowering Boers.

"I am that I could reproduce the story of the subsequent events with the vivid detail and quaint phraseology used by Ross when telling me the story. He speaks with a drawl and pronounced American accent.

"Say, you sol-dured dogs," Ross said to them, "I've caught you, with the goods on you, and you got to take up. I'll give you just five minutes to make your peace with your Creator and then I'll pass you out. I guess the good God won't listen to each we-nin on you, but I'm game to let you try your best at it. Step freely now with them petitions to your good Maker!"

With a revolver in each hand and his three men covering the 15 prisoners with their guns, Ross counted out the minutes. The Boers must have all realized that he was in earnest and stood watching him anxiously.

"One more minute and out you get!" Ross snapped when he had finished counting off four minutes. He stepped toward the first man and held his revolver at the man's head. The Boer cowered back and began to beg for mercy.

"Cut out that woman business!" commanded Ross. "I guess the good God won't listen to you, and, if he won't you can expect me to. Time up! Here's where you go to see your God, if he'll see you, which I doubts." And went the revolver, and the man sank dead at the major's feet. The other Boers met their fate in their way into the "Great Unknown," and the deed completed, Ross and his men mounted their horses and rode at a gallop after their regiment.

The story touched on some, and Ross was sent for by Lord Kitchener at Pretoria. No record of this meeting is obtainable, and Ross will not speak of it. At least the officers did not interfere, later on, with Ross' being appointed a companion of the Distinguished Service order, the result of his report to the Victoria Cross.

Another story told about Major Ross, which I hope, to know to be true in every detail, is that when on going into Pretoria one morning from an expedition after a Boer commando, his little column was mistaken for a party of Boers by a British garrison artillery battery of 4.7 guns in one of the hills guarding the capital. The shells fell wide and this fact irritated Ross. He left the column in charge of his second in command and rode, at a gallop toward the hill from which the battery was firing. Oblivious to shot and shell, Ross rode right to the summit of the hill, hastily arriving unscathed.

"Who's the sol-dured fool in command of this outfit?" he shouted to the astonished gunners.

A young artillery lieutenent came forward and saluted the major. The latter seized the younger man sternly.

"That the best practice you and your fools can make?" he inquired with deep disgust. "I'll report you for bad shooting when I get into Pretoria. Maybe the general will let you keep them. I guess you had bet ter go back to school, young man, and learn how to make some serly neglected."

Ross wheeled his horse and clattered down the hill again to rejoin his command. For many a long day the lieutenant will suffer from the gibes of his brother officers, and the men of the battery will probably never recover their self-respect.

Ross came out of the Boer war with a remarkable record behind him and with the undying admiration and friendship of Lord Kitchener and other generals. He is a name to conjure with. The Boers feared him to a marked degree, so much so that when large parties of them came up to East Africa to settle after the war and learned that Ross was an official, they told the governor that they were afraid to settle in the same country with Ross. But they have learned that the major is not as the major in peace are ten entirely different fellows. Ross is now Assistant Warden Cape Colony. The Boers trembled at the mere mention of the name of Ross. It would take a book to write the history of their deeds of marvelous daring. They were in all created in their warfare, either.

Perhaps the most famous episode in their adventurous exploits was the shooting of 15 Boer prisoners, whom they had captured when wearing the British uniform. Another story told about Major Ross, which I hope, to know to be true in every detail, is that when on going into Pretoria one morning from an expedition after a Boer commando, all surprising under the circumstances.

I think that few men have had more interesting and exciting experiences with big game than Major Ross, yet he will not talk about them, for he is a very modest man, despite the fame of his own sterling qualities. His work carries him continually among the denizens of forest and plain, and few men know the habits and wiles of the wild game in "Nature's Zoo" better than Ross.

I feel rather like telling tales out of school by narrating the following little story, but Ross—"Ding" as some pastime, they started in to turn Neilpshi into a "wild west" town by shooting out the street lamps from the verande of the hotel. This sport soon palled, and they went for a quiet down town with the object of seeking new fields of enjoyment. They happened to pass the bank and saw the window open, and a three-clerk working at a ledger under a light.

The temptation was too strong for Ross and his three American companions. They lit some crackers and threw them into the bank building through the open window. The clerk suddenly came for bonds and rushed out, shouting "Murder!" The negro constable on the beat below blew his whistle for help, and the barracks being close at hand, soon had some 20 men on the scene, responding to the "alarm" call. In the general mix-up, and to avoid arrest for their pranks, Ross and his companions hurriedly bribed the policemen and put them to flight.

I happened to be in command of the police at Nairobi, and next came upon the scene in answer to a riot-alarm call. I arrested the four practical jokers and fined them $100 each and "resisting a police officer in the execution of his duty." They were released on bail, and subsequently forfeited their bonds to the "alarm" fund. I arrested the four practical jokers and fined them $100 each and "resisting a police officer in the execution of his duty." They were released on bail, and subsequently forfeited their bonds to the Judge and a white jury.

The jury, in the face of the weight of evidence, brought in a verdict of not guilty, and all were acquitted. Ross and his friends were not at all concerned for his share in the escapade, and laughingly told me that he thought a good joke on the good American could not enjoy his national sport without getting into trouble.

When Colonel Roosevelt visited East Africa on his Major Ross, and the two men found much in common. At the banquet given in Nairobi to the ex-president, Major Ross was selected to present a rhinoceros-foot box to Colonel Roosevelt as a souvenir of the regard from the Americans in the colony. In a short speech at the presentation, Major Ross, as every one's keen delight and particularity that of Colonel Roosevelt, naively referred to the famous hunter as "Colonel referred to the same as "Colonel Ross had spent in America and parts of Europe, but the Colonel's feelings there both "pretty good Rocky mountain time."

It is somewhat surprising to think that the major, with many weird experiences and confidences he must have settled down to his official life in East Africa. Ross is in quite a splendid white duck government uniform with his name and gilttering with his many orders and medals, and you will hardly credit that this is the man whose reckless daring and fearlessness in facing out of justice in the Boer war out the British Empire's admiration.

See him as I have seen him, cited in evening dress at a government house function, smoking a short pipe, and you may laugh for a moment before you realize that you are in the presence of a man that he is a leader among men.

The spirit at the rover of the plains and as the scenes of civilization is strong within him, and it is plain to the naked eye. He is no product of civilized customs. He is not polished, his hands are not manicured, and his nails are not pink. Such niceties are anything but fashionable, but he cares not, and after a few days' conversation with him you do not either.

Again, see him playing with children, as I have seen him, laughing and jesting. You will begin to understand that though a man may be skilled in the ways of life when it is necessary, the does not imply that he is unworthy of love. You can see him look at Rose when he is playing with his little children friends, can be sure of his every duty.

But Ross will tell you that it is something unpardonable to grow old and if you do so it is essential that you have something up to the quicker on the trigger than the other man. As he once naively told me, "Shoot quick and straight, for that man he gets the full service and won't want you."

One day the restless spirit within the major will become beaten frame will bid him pack up his traps and go forth again to fresh adventures. The call of the jungle will be too much for long. When that spirit moves Ross there will be no holding him. We shall have a way of happening when he leaves us.

But for the moment he has settled down to a home life with a wife, and that is a good deal for him to be "tied down" to his footsteps. But I do not think that he will stay content for long in civilization.

GERMAN ROYAL FAMILY GROUP

This is the latest photograph of Prince Aegust Wilhelm, fourth son of the emperor of Germany; his wife, who was Princess Victoria of Schleswig Holstein, and their little child.

PRINCESS IS A "FAN"

Marie of Sweden Roots for Husband's Team.

Second Son of King and His Wife Introduced Great American Game of Baseball as a Summer Sport in the North.

Stockholm. — Prince Wilhelm of Sweden and his charming wife, Princess Marie, a daughter of Grand Duke Paul Alexandrovitch, uncle of the czar, have become baseball "fans," with the intention of interesting the officers of the capital and their wives in the sport.

For many years the prince has been rated a keen football player, making the fellow countrymen realize that the spring and autumn months should be utilized with games, as well as the winter sports, like skating, snowshoeing and skating are the pastimes.

But with the advent of the last Olympic games in the capital came the great American game of baseball. Daily the officers and their wives may be seen in the midst of an interested group of nobility watching the American athletes play.

The prince watched Thorpe and his colleagues pitching and batting the ball he would grow greatly excited, picking up the American "fan" phrases and urging on the men. The prince's wife would follow the vicissitudes of the game, now and then questioning her royal husband on the meaning of certain plays.

So when Prince Wilhelm started a baseball club his wife at once began to interest her friends. Every day at the practice of the "Manhall" team, which was one of the four organized in the capital, the princess, dressed in a manner that has won her the title of the "most smartly gowned woman" of Norway, Sweden and Denmark, would be in the bleachers learning the fine points of the game.

The entire country then grew interested in baseball, since it had, as it were, received royal sanction, and soon Malmo, that quaint and churchly town, was ringing with the enthusiasm of the new sport and a team was at once formed. Upsala, too, succumbed into this recently learned game, and the rivalry of the two towns became most intense.

With the sanction of the prince, a league has been formed and baseball is bound to become as popular in Sweden as it has in America. The princess delights especially in having with her at all the games the wives and daughters of the American minister and the attaches of the legation in Strandvagen. Her pretty English is becoming charmingly studded with phrases such as one hears at every game of baseball in America, and her knowledge of the game is very nearly as great as that of Prince Wilhelm.

CANNIBALS LIVED IN BOSTON

Professor Harvey W. Shimer Finds Actual First Settlers Relished Human Beings.

Boston.—That New England's prehistoric men—who antedates the oldest inhabitants from 3,000 to 10,000 years, was a cannibal and of the orang-outang type, is the contention of Harvey W. Shimer, assistant professor of paleontology at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Professor Shimer has unearthed stone implements and bones in a shell mound at Ipswich which show that the earliest type there dwelt from 3,000 to 5,000, and perhaps 10,000 years ago, less than 40 miles from the heart of Boston.

At Ipswich also pieces of broken bones of a human victim the diet, Professor Shimer declares, was accordedly being sacrificed to gratify a cannibal appetite, were found.

Professor Shimer said: "There were a number of bones broken into short er pieces—human bones—which indicate that the earliest type of man was a cannibal.

"At another kitchen-midden, which I explored at Gardner's Island, off the Long Island shore, I found that the remains of a recent stage of the earliest, and pottery utensils made in the most primitive fashion, wholly unlike the European stone-age pottery, indicating that these early people lived here before the invasion of the European types."

HERE'S CURE FOR BRAIN FAG

Kenyan Painter Returns From Wilds of Africa With Trophies and a Remedy for Racked Nerves.

New York.—Kenyon Painter, big game hunter, sportsman and naturalist, of Cleveland, Ohio, has returned from an eight months' big game hunt in central East Africa. In addition to a great number of trophies and birds he brings with him a bit of first-hand advice and a "cure" for racked nerves.

"I tell you," he said, for bringing a man back to a natural state of health—for clearing the cobwebs from a city man's brain and the mist from his eyes—there is nothing like a month in the forests of East Africa.

"The climate is superb and after you have tramped a month or two, or even eight months' big game hunt become part of him, and, above all, have enjoyed life in the open, day and night—and you begin to feel that you are really living and you report to a state of natural, primitive health."

MONEY IS DESPISED TRASH

Love, Kindness, Baseball and "Movies" Make Isle of Guam a Paradise, Says Captain Brackett.

Chicago.—There is a tiny speck on the map of the South Seas. It is found by drawing a line due east 1,500 miles from Manila. At the end of the line is the world's only Utopia. 320 square miles in extent, where money is not needed, used or desired. It is the island of Guam.

Capt. W. Brackett, United States marine corps, vice-governor and chief justice of the little island, visited the marine headquarters in Chicago and smiled a bored smile at the mention of money.

"Money is just so much metal or paper to us said, and waved his hand in repudiation of everything that can be purchased. "Over in Guam everybody is happy and no one wishes for money. Guam is the one spot of complete content in all the world because it has no money system."

Not even a system of exchange or barter obtains among the 12,000 brown-skinned men who make up the island's population.

VOTE FOR BOND ISSUE.

It is an important special election that is to be held in Red Lake Falls, Tuesday, May 12, and yet the proposition is one offering little room for difference of opinion.

The city has a floating indebtedness exceeding a large sum of money. This indebtedness is evidenced by unpaid city warrants and the interest on the amounts for which the warrants have been drawn. It is proposed to bond the city for an amount sufficient to take up these warrants, stop the interest on them, do away with the necessity of the warrants being discounted when presented and put the city's business on a cash basis.

It is not probable that any good and intelligent citizen will be opposed to the proposition and there is little doubt that it will carry by a substantial majority. But that condition should not influence any one not to take the trouble to vote at all, for it will be an advantage to the city in negotiating the sale of the bonds if there is a practically unanimous expression from the people of the city.

That there is a big floating indebtedness is to be regretted, but that is no reason for opposing the plan to make the city finances as much better as possible. Let every one vote "yes" on the bonding proposition.

Most any old day may now be officially observed as tin-can day.

This is the season of the year when the ambitious city man gets out the spade and digs—for bait.

One may now believe that the fellow who first coined the phrase "perfect as perfect can be" was far-sighted and no joker.

It seems that most every one was hoeing for "revision downward" on the things he buys and not on the things he sells.

That winter weather in March may be accounted for. The president has found it necessary to discharge the boss weatherman.

Now that we are to have an income tax, the assessor is sure to discover that the income of many men is rather early in the next morning.

The president seems to be desirous of creating the impression in the public mind that he expects to be able to live within his salary and that donations will be unwelcome.

Hereafter county officials will be elected for terms of four years and candidates for county office and for the legislature will be nominated at the primaries and elections held in June of the election year instead of in the fall.

Apples to Small Cities.

The Dunn good roads bill, which has become a law of the state, makes provision for the construction of rural highways, but there are also no appropriations of state money in large cities under the provisions of this new law. However, the necessity of making a street of a village or small city n part of a state rural highway, as a connecting link between two sections of a state highway, was provided for. The provisions of the law governing the point are as follows:

"The council of any village or city of the fourth class, may, with the consent of the Highway Commission, designate any street or road within its corporate limits as a State road when the street or road so designated will constitute a direct connecting link with a part of a State Road leading to and out of such city or village. The consent of the Highway Commission to the designation of any such street or road within the corporate limits of any village or city of the fourth class may be obtained by such village or city by substantially the same order and upon consideration of the same conditions as is herein provided for the location of a State road. Any street or road within any village or city of the fourth class, so designated, may be improved as a State road, and state aid paid therefor as hereinafter provided. The council or city clerk, as the case may be, shall make substantially the same report as is herein required to be made by the County Auditor with reference to state roads designated by the county board, and payment of the state's share of the cost of construction of improvement thereof shall be made in substantially the same manner and upon substantially the same conditions precedent as is herein provided for the payment of state aid to counties; provided, however, that the payment to be made by the state shall be made from the Trunk Highway Fund, which is such village or city is situate; and provided, further, that no more than one half the cost of constructing or improving any state road within the corporate limits of any village or city, nor in any event, in excess fifteen hundred rollars ($1500) per mile shall be paid as state aid therefor from the State Road and Bridge Fund."

Warning to Potato Growers.

The contents of the following statement sent out from the University Farm should be given serious consideration by all potato growers:

"Potato diseases were especially serious last year and the attention of every potato grower in the state is earnestly called to this question. The Minnesota potato crop is large and especially valuable on account of the scarcity and high price of potatoes. The diseases, particularly those of the soil, are increasing to such a foothold in this state—as is bound to happen when potatoes are raised extensively as they are here.

"Now is the time to combat these diseases before the state gets a bad reputation for diseased potatoes. The soil can be disinfected at once so as to not wait until the diseases are so bad that Minnesota seed potatoes are always suspected of diseas. Minnesota farmers cannot afford to delay a single season. Every effort must be made to retain the reputation which Minnesota potatoes have enjoyed. It is easier to keep a good reputation than to get rid of a bad one, as some of the old potato-growing states are learning.

"Last year farmer co-operate and let every potato grower see to it that his own fields do not become infested with the diseases which are so hard to get rid of and which greatly increase until the land is practically worthless for potatoes unless vigorous steps are taken to get rid of the diseases.

"Unless Minnesota farmers heed the precaution and co-operate to see that their neighbors do likewise, the whole state will suffer, the old diseases will increase and even more dangerous ones, such as potato wart, are likely to gain a foothold."

CO-ADJUTORS' REMARKS.

International Falls Journal: The commission appointed to secure 46 beautiful suffragettes is up against a hard proposition. Infusion of beauty in the make would accomplish more than militant tactics.

Stillwater Gazette: When a chicken has the neighbor's garden yard, is it wild, is a question the supreme court of Oregon is called on to decide. The owner would be if the neighbor had chicken for dinner at his expense.

Browns Valley Tribune: We are sorry that the legislature has not been the bill for a constitutional convention. We believe a new constitution is needed, but the present body seems to think otherwise.

Crookston Times: Texas farmers want to know why they get only 60 per cent of the retail prices of their products. Considering that the grower has to seed out a team to deliver his crop, cabbages have the heaviest tax to be satisfied to get anything at all.

A LITTLE DELAY.

In Publication of Second Installment of Premium Fair Premium Lists.

It was expected that the publication of the list of premiums offered for exhibits at the 1913 Red Lake County Fair would appear in this week's issue of this paper, but there has been a little delay in the preparation of the list. However, this delay will not inconvenience prospective exhibitors, for the part of the list printed last week contained the premiums offered for exhibits of field grasses and other agricultural products.

"Such shipments mean Studebaker has the confidence of the farmer"

Every year over one hundred thousand horse-driven vehicles are sold by Studebaker. Over a million Studebaker vehicles are always in use. Stop and think what that means.

This enormous output means that Farmers—the men who know—depend upon Studebaker wagons to do their work.

And a Studebaker wagon never fails. It is always ready to do a big day's work—and to keep on doing it. There are thousands of Studebaker wagons that have been in service from 20 to 40 years.

A Studebaker wagon is a real business asset. Wheels, body, frame, axles and running gear have been tested and retested by experts. You can buy cheaper wagons but they're not Studebakers, nor will they last like Studebaker wagons.

FOR COUNTRY BOYS AND GIRLS.

Gold Medal Offered for Best Essay on Good Roads.

A gold medal to the school boy or girl between the ages of 10 and 18 who writes the best composition, not to exceed 800 words, on the repair and maintenance of earth roads, is to be awarded by Logan Waller Page Director, Office of Public Roads, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C. All compositions must be submitted to Mr. Page before May 15, 1913, and the medal will be awarded as soon thereafter as the compositions can be graded. The composition may be based on knowledge gained from books or other sources, but no quotations should be made.

After many years' experience in dealing with the public road situation of the country, it is Mr. Page's belief that ignorance on the subject of repair and maintenance of roads is as much the cause of their bad condition as any other one factor. It is expected that this competition will bring about a better understanding of the subject of repair and maintenance of country roads.

Many children living in the rural districts have experienced the disadvantages of roads rendered impassable through a lack of proper maintenance and it is expected that their interest in the competition will stimulate greater interest among parents. Bad roads have prevented many children from obtaining a proper education and have prevented doctors from reaching the sick or rural patients in time to save their lives.

Any child between the ages mentioned, attending a country school, may compete. Only one side of the paper must be written on, each page should be numbered; the name, age, and address of the writer, and the name and location of the school which he or she is attending must be plainly written at the top of the first page. The conditions governing the competition has been sent to the superintendents of schools in the rural districts. No further information can be obtained from the Office of Public roads. This announcement should be plain to everyones, and all children will thus start on a basis of equality.

SYNOPSIS.

Bill Cannon, the bonanza king, and his daughter, Rose, who had passed up Mrs. Cornelius Hyan's ball at San Francisco to accompany her father, arrive at Anderson. Dominick Hyan calls on his mother in the Cannon suite and finds Rose already installed. The determined old lady refuses to reconcile her daughter-in-law. Dominick had been trapped into a marriage with Hortense Lawton, a stunning but penniless beauty. Dominick, ashamed of the deed, they have frequent quarrels, and he stays away. Cannon and his daughter are annoyed by Al Anderson's persistent attentions. Dominick is unconscious of the sensation brought to Antelope Hotel Anderson's arrival. Cannon warns Dominick back to his wife, but the young man, who has fallen in love with Rose, blunders and writes letter trying to smooth over difficulties between them. Dominick at last finds a note to fellow snowbound prisoners in hotel parlor.

CHAPTER VII.—(Continued.)

"Didn't the people at the Rocky Bar Hotel try to dissuade you from starting?" said Buford. "They must have known it was dangerous. They must have been worried about you or they wouldn't have telegraphed up."

"Oh, I believe they did." The young man tried to hide the annoyance the question gave him under a dry brevity of speech. "They did all that they ought to have done. I'll see them again on my way down."

"And you are partaking!" The host turned to Rose with whom, as he sat beside her at table, he had become quite friendly. "The blind confidence of youth, Miss Cannon, isn't a grand, inspiring thing?"

Dominick shifted his aching feet under the rug. He was becoming exceedingly irritated and impatient, and wondered how much longer he would be able to respond politely to the conversational assiduities of the stranger.

"Now," continued Buford, "I can satisfy my curiosity on one point. Was what you were kind of the distributor of the enterprise, did you start?"

"Perhaps I liked the danger, wanted it to tone me up. I'm a bank clerk, Mr. Buford, and my life's monotonous. Danger's a change."

He raised his voice and spoke with sudden, rude defiance. Buford looked quickly at him, while his eyebrows went up nearly to his hair.

"A bank clerk, eh!" he said with a falling inflection of disappointment, much challenged to discover that the child of millions occupied such a humble niche. "I—I—am not aware of that."

"An assistant cashier," continued Dominick in the same key of exasperation, "and I managed to get a holiday at the season because my father was one of the founders of the bank and they allow me certain privileges. If you would like to know anything else ask me and I'll answer as well as I know how."

His manner and tone so plainly indicated his resentment of the others's curiosity that the actor flushed and shrank. He was evidently well-meaning and sensitive, and the young man's rudeness hurt rather than angered him. For a moment nothing was said, Buford making no response other than to clear his throat, while he stretched out one arm and pulled down his cuff with a jerking movement. There was constraint in the air, and Rose, feeling that he had been treated with unnecessary harshness, sought to palliate it by lifting the book on her lap and saying to him:

"This is the book we were talking about when you came in, Mr. Buford, 'Wife in Name Only.' Have you read it?"

She handed him the ragged volume, and holding it off he eyed it with a scrutiny all the more marked by the way he drew his brows down until they hung like bushy eaves over his eyes.

"No, my dear young lady, I have not. Nor do I feel disposed to do so. Wife in Name Only!' That tells a whole story without reading a word. Were you going to read it?"

"No, Mr. Hyan and I were just looking over them. We were thinking about reading one of them aloud. This one happened to be on the pile."

"To me," continued Buford, "the name is repelling because it suggests sorrows of my own."

There was a pause. He evidently expected a question which undoubtedly was not going to come from Dominick, who sat fallen together in the arm-chair looking at him with moody lit-lustre. There was some hope from Rose, who gazed at the floor but said nothing. Buford was forced to respond with an unctuous depth of tone. "Suppress sorrows of my own," and fasten his glance on her, so that, as she raised her eyes, they encountered the commanding encouragement of his.

"Sorrows of your own!" she repeated timidly, but with the rounded questioning inflection.

"Yes, my dear Miss Cannon," and he turned the actor with a melancholy which was full of a rich, dark enjoyment. "My wife is now in same city."

Then another pause, and neither showing any intention of breaking it, Buford remarked:

"That seems a mild—"

"What sorrow?" said Dominick brusquely.

"The sorrow of a deserted man," returned the actor with now, for the first time, something of the dignity of real feeling in his manner.

"Oh," the monosyllable was extremely nonconmittal, but it had the air of finality as though Dominick intended to say no more.

"Has she—er—left you?" said the girl in a low and rather awe-stricken voice.

The actor inclined his head in an acquiescent bow:

"She has."

Again there was a pause. Unless Buford chose to be more biographical, the conversation appeared to have come to a deadlock. Neither of the listeners could at this stage break into his reserve with questions and yet to switch off on a new subject was not to be thought of at a moment of such emotional intensity. The actor evidently felt this, for he said suddenly, with a relapse into a lighter tone and letting his eyebrows escape from an overshadowing closeness to his eyes:

"But why should I trouble you with the sorrows that have cast their shadow on me? Why should my mediocre moonlit troubles be allowed to darken the brightness of two young lives which have not yet known the joys and the perils of the wedded state?"

The caution that followed this remark was the most portentous that had yet fallen on the ship. Rose cast a surreptitious glance at the dark figure of young Ryan, lying back in the shadows of the arm-chair. As she looked he stirred and said with the abrupt, hard pronunciation which had marked his manner since Buford's entrance:

"Don't take too much for granted, Mr. Buford. I've known some of the joys and perils of the wedded state myself."

The actor stared at him in open-eyed surprise.

"I don't quite understand," he said, "that you are a married man?"

"You do," returned Dominick.

"Really now, I never would have guessed it! Pardon me for not having grasped the full extent of your position. Your wife, I take it, has no knowledge of the risk she recently ran of losing her husband?"

"I hope not."

"Well," he replied with a manner of sudden cheery playfulness, "we'll take good care that she doesn't learn. When the wires are up we'll connect by telegram that all is a master piece of diplomatic lying. Lucky young men to have a loving wife at home. Of all of us you are the one who can best realize the meaning of the ark. 'Tis sweet to know there is an eye to mark our coming and—"

Dominick's face flung off and rose to his feet.

"If you can get Perley to help me I'll go upstairs and lie down a bit and I'll go back to my room."

He tried to step forward, but the pain of his unhealed foot was unbearable, and he caught the edge of the table and held it, his face paling with sudden anguish. The actor, startled by the abruptness of the uprising, approached him with a vague proffer of assistance and was greeted by the short command:

"Go and get Perley! He's in the bar probably. I can't stand this way for long. Hurry up!"

Buford ran out of the room, and Rose somewhat timidly drew near the young man, braced against the table, his eyes downcast, his face hard in its sharpness with anger and pain.

"Can't I help you?" she said. "Perley may not be there at once. Mr. Buford and I can get you up stairs."

"Oh, no," he answered, his words seared by a very impatient and ugly temper."

Buford had found Miss Cannon one of the most sensible and charming ladies he had ever met, and it was therefore a good deal of a surprise to have her turn upon him a face of cold, reproving disagreement, and remark in a voice that matched it:

"I don't agree with you at all, Mr. Buford, and you seem quite to forget that Mr. Ryan has been very sick and is still in great pain."

The actor was exceedingly abashed. He would not have offended Miss Cannon for anything in the world, and it seemed to him that a being so compact of graciousness and consideration would be the first to censure an exhibition of ill-humor such as young Ryan had made. He stammered out an apologetic sentence and it did not add to his comfort to see that she was not entirely mollified by it and that there was a slight, disapproving coldness that put him at a great distance and made him feel mortified and ill at ease.

CHAPTER VIII.

The Unknown Eros.

The ten days that followed were among the most important of Dominick Ryan's life. Looking back at them he wondered that he had been so blind to the transformation of his being which was taking place. Great emotions are often not only not more recognized, by the individuals, then great transitional epochs are known by the nations experiencing them. Dominick did not realize that the most engrossing, compelling passion he had ever felt was slowly invading him. He did not even know that he was falling in love with a woman that he could never own end of whom he was a sin to think. He did not argue or think about anything. He was as a vessel gently filling with elemental forces, and like the vessel he was passive. He sens the world shrink in and the forces would run over. Meantime he was held by e indecision, madness and consonsing as the determination of a child, to live in the present. He had the feeling of the desert traveler who has found the oasis. The danger to be hid him, barring and sinister with the agony of his transit, and the desert by before him with its terrors to be faced, but for the moment he could lie still and rest and forget in the fountain under the cool of the trees.

He did not consciously think of Rose. But if she were not there he was passive. He was content with the secret exhilaration at her approach, the dead blankness of his lack of her when she was absent, told him nothing. These were the feelings he had. They filled him and left no cool residue of reason wherewith to watch and guard. He was taken unawares so drearily confident of his allegiance to his particular private tragedy that he did not admit the possibility of a defection. A sense of rest was in the air and he set it down—if he ever thought of it at all—to the relief of a temporary respite. Poor Dominick, with his inexperience of sweet things, did not argue that respite from pain should be a quiescent, contented condition of being far removed from that state of secret, tortured gladness that thrilled him at the sound of a woman's footstep.

No situation could have been invented better suited for the fostering of sentiment. His helpless state demanded her constant attention, the attitude of nurse to patient, the solicitude of the consoling woman for the disabled, suffering man, have been short but his tone more conciliatory, and trying to bolster about. Rose was wrong that man's seek if I'd had to listen to him five minutes longer! Here Perley and Buford entered, end the former, offering his support to the invalid, led him hobbling out of the door into the hall. The actor looked after them for a moment and then came back to the fire where Miss Cannon was standing, thoughtfully regarding the burning logs.

"I've no doubt," he said, "that young Mr. Ryan is an estimable gentleman, but he certainly appears to be possessed since time immemorial, recognized as the most unpleasant of human and good woman, was enough of ous to enjoy rashly this maternal office of alternate cosseting and railing one who, by the natural order of things, should have stood alone in his strength, dictating the law. Perhaps the human female so delights in this particular opportunity for tyranny because it is one of her few chances for indulging her passion for authority.

Rose, if she did not quite revel in it, discreetly enjoyed her period of dominance. In the beginning Dominick had been not a man but a patient—about the same to her as the doll is to the little girl. Then when he began to get better, and the man rose, tingling with renewed life, from the ashes of the patient, she quickly fell back into the old position. With the inherited, dainty deceptiveness of generations of women she knew that she was not entirely mollified by it and that the slightest change in the domineering coldness that put him at a great distance and made him feel mortified and ill at ease.

He was taken unawares so drearily confident of his allegiance to his particular private tragedy that he did not admit the possibility of a defection. A sense of rest was in the air and he set it down—if he ever thought of it at all—to the relief of a temporary respite. Poor Dominick, with his inexperience of sweet things, did not argue that respite from pain should be a quiescent, contented condition of being far removed from that state of secret, tortured gladness that thrilled him at the sound of a woman's footstep.

No situation could have been invented better suited for the fostering of sentiment. His helpless state demanded her constant attention, the attitude of nurse to patient, the solicitude of the consoling woman for the disabled, suffering man, have been tory and stood in unconsistenced support, willing for Congress to take some notice of her. Buford told stories of the victimization of the people of the Australian bush, grim legends of the days of the penal settlements at Botany Bay. Young Ryan was the only man of the group who contributed nothing to these Sirens' Nights Entertainments. He sat silent in his chair, apparently listening, and under the shadow of the hand arched over his eyes, looking at the girl opposite. But the girl had no soul. Her capacity passed into its third weak, and signs that release was at hand showed them. Thof could go out. The streets of Antelope were beaten into footdeep slush. Even the cosiness with the confinement of children liberated from school, rushed into open air diversions and athletic exercise. The first word from the outside world came by restored telegraphic communication. Another message poured in from San Francisco. Mrs. Ryan, the elder, sent telegrams es long as letters and answered them with the promptness of an impassioned gratitude on the lamp. Her letters to that boy could not speak of without growing husky. Willoughby had one that made him blush. Dominick had several. None, however, bad come from his wife and he guessed that none had been sent her, his remark to Rose to "let her alone" having been taken as a wish to spare her anxiety. It was thought that the mail would be in on a day or two. That would be the end of the fairy tale. They sat about in the hall on those last evenings discussing their letters, what they expected, and whom they would be from. No one told any more stories; the thought of news from the outside world made them restless and irritable. Dominick had several. They sat about in the hall on those last evenings discussing their letters, what they expected, and whom they would be from. No one told any more stories; the thought of news from the outside world made them restless and irritable. A loose fur-lined coat enveloped her to her feet, and after she had handed him the letter she pulled off the mittens she had worn unconsciously in the fervors of the coat, with fingers that were purple with the intensity of the cold.

"There's only one for you," she said. "I waited till the postmaster sorted all the letters and then I made him give it to me and ran back here with it. The entire population of Antelope's in the post-office and there's the greatest excitement."

Her coat was unfastened and she threw back its long fronts, her figure outlined against the gray fur lining. She snatched off her cap and tossed it on the counter and with a quick hand brushed away the hair it had pressed down on her forehead.

"I got seven," she said, turning to look, "one, two, three, four, five hands, and the judge, gauntlines, and Willoughby, three. But only one for you—poor, neglected man!"

Spreading her hands wide to the blaze she looked at him over her shoulder, laughing lasingly. He had the letter in his hands still unopened.

"Why," she cried, "what an extraordinary sight! You haven't opened it!"

"No," he answered, turning it over. "I haven't."

"I've always heard that curiosity was a feminine weakness but I never knew till now," she said. "Please go on and read it, because if you don't I'll feel that I'm preventing you and I'll have to go up stairs to my own room, which is cold as an refrigerator. Don't make me polite and considerate against my will."

Without answering her he tore open the letter and, moving to the light of the window, held the sheet up and began to read.

There was silence for some minutes. The fire sputtered and snapped, and once or twice the stray pine rustled in Dominick's hands. Rose bent her fingers out to the warmth, stripping them with her head on one side as if she had never seen them before. Presently she slid unheedfully out of her coat, and dropped it, a heap of silky fur, on a chair beside her. The movement made it convenient to steal a glance at the young man. She read reading the letter, his body close against the window-pane, his face full of frowning, almost fierce concentration. She turned back to the fire and made small, surreptitious smoothings and jerks of arrangement at her collar, her belt, her skirt. Dominick turned the page and there was something aggressive in the crackling of the thin, dry sheet.

"Perley got a letter from your mother," she said suddenly, "that he was reading in a corner of the post-office, and it nearly made him cry."

There was no answer. She waited for a space and then said, projecting the remark into the heart of the fire, "Yours must be a most interesting letter."

She heard him move and looked quickly back at him, her face all gay challenge. He was not by a long bo somber that her expression changed as she had received a check to her gaiety an unexpected and effectual s a blow. She stared a little as he cams "toward her, the letter in his hand.

"It is an interesting letter," he said. "It's from my wife."

Since those first days of his illness his wife's name had been rarely mentioned. He had thought it was because young Mrs. Ryan was a delicate subject best left alone; Dominick, remembering that troubled him of Berry we patient. But the truth was that he did not like to talk of her. A curious excitement, and held up to his gaze a small sheet of note paper covered with fine writing. At the moment the bell door banged, bar fool sounded in the passage, and she entered the room with a rush of cold air and a triumphant cry of:

"The mail's come!"

He lingped forward to meet her, his face from bent hand the letter and held toward him. For the first moment he looked at her, not at the letter, vaguely dwindled to a thing of no importance when their eyes met over the face now white with cold as the outside air into a bright, beaming rosiness. She wore on her head a man's fur cap which was pulled down, and pressed wings of fair hair against her cheeks and forehead. A loose fur-lined coat enveloped her to her feet, and after she had handed him the letter she pulled off the mittens she had worn unconsciously in the fervors of the coat, with fingers that were purple with the intensity of the cold.

"There's only one for you," she said. "I waited till the postmaster sorted all the letters and then I made him give it to me and ran back here with it. The entire population of Antelope's in the post-office and there's the greatest excitement."

LIKE U. S. CAPITAL

Australia's Seat of Government Planned in Fields and Woods.

Plans Drawn by American Architect Are Accepted and Work Begun in Canberra, N. S. W.—Will Be City Beautiful.

Canberra, N. S. W.—Americans will take a keen interest in the construction of the federal capital city of the commonwealth of Australia, because the federal capital city of the United States, it was completely planned before the foundation stone of the first permanent building was laid, and also because the architect whose designs have been accepted, Walter Burley Griffin, is an American, says the Boston Transcript. The choice of the Canberra district of New South Wales, as the site of the city, was made by the commonwealth government in 1910, and the invitation to architects embodying the conditions of completion was issued April 30, 1911. To give an idea of the magnitude of the task, it may be stated that the requirements for the consideration of the designers included the allocation of appropriate areas embracing sites not only for the seat of parliament, residence of the governor general and the usual ministerial and administrative offices, but places of public worship, mint, national art gallery and library, state house, prisons, state government factories, university, technical college, city hall, general post office, museum, central railway station, railway marshaling yards, military barracks, arsenal and police courts, jail, hospital, national theater, cannery powder mill, gas works, markets, stadium, parks and gardens, etc. It was also required to design in a model city, and Mr. Griffin may well be congratulated on his success in winning the competition to give Washington, D. C., a worthy sister in Canberra, N. S. W.

Why the Australian government should have decided to build the seat of the country in the pastoral corner is not quite clear, but the site is certainly one fine expanse of what is a "city beautiful." The lay of the land, combining a picturesque and important hills of moderate height, will lend itself easily to the production of fine architectural and landscape effects. Canberra is just east of the Great Dividing Range and about 40 miles from the town of Yass, on the main line of railway from Sydney to Melbourne, and it is about 150 miles from Jervis bay, with which it is to be connected by a new railroad. The temporary Australian Military school is the only building yet on the site, excepting a few farmhouses, but now that the governor general has laid the foundation stone the architectural development of the commonwealth's seat seat of government may be expected to progress apace. It is the greatest Australia imitates Canada in selecting a capital. Canada did not want to build Ottawa, from the ground up, but it converted the old "Bytown," with its lumber mills and shipping point into a seat of government. Queen Victoria made choice of Ottawa in the capacity of grand arbitrator, after Montreal, Quebec, Toronto and Kingston had quarreled for the distinction of being the capital until any three of the place of every-day courses to a level where the truth was an obligation and the language of polite exchange could not exist. But the women, who hides and protected herself with these shields, made an effort to keep it on the conversational plane.

"It—is—the well?" she stammered, framing the regulation words almost unconsciously.

"She's well," he answered, "she's very well. She wants me to come home."

"What are you some mocking bird soup?"

A new waitress in a family hotel on the hill startled the diners last night by asking like question.

"I'll not eat at this hotel again. I'm a member of the Audubon society. The very ideal Mocking soup out of mocking birds!" indignantly remarked a woman.

"I'll take a chance on it just once," he said, "and much to my surprise with its formation, was almost daily frequenter there as prince of Wales, and it was also constantly used by his present majesty before his accession.

PRINCE YOUNGEST CLUBMAN

King George's Eldest Son Joins the Marlborough Club of London.

London.—The election of the prince of Wales to the Marlborough club, which took place recently, makes the fifth of the three royal princes club-man in London. Since its formation the Marlborough has always been the special club of the heirs apparent as the king, who was much connected with its formation, was almost daily frequenter there as prince of Wales, and it was also constantly used by his present majesty before his accession.

JAS. C. HAYNES DIES

FORMER MAYOR OF MINNEAPOLIS SUCCUMBS UPON ARRIVAL HOME.

HAD BEEN AWAY FOR HEALTH

Flags Placed at Half Mast On Public Buildings As Soon As End Is Announced—Had Served His City and Party Well.

Minneapolis.—James C. Haynes, for twenty-three years a factor in the state and political life of Minneapolis and four times mayor of the city, died at 9:30 a. m. yesterday at his home, 710 East River road. He was 67 years of age. Back from the isle of Pines, where he had gone in the hope of benefitting his failing health, Mr. Haynes reached Minneapolis yesterday.

At his home he began rapidly to fail. He was conscious to the time of his death. His wife, his daughter, Mrs. Lucille F. Carpenter, and grand-daughter, Carroll Carpenter, were with him when he died. Harvey B. Haynes of Minneapolis is a brother. Dean Clark Haynes, a son lives in Montana.

Member of Many Orders.

Mr. Haynes was identified with a number of social and fraternal organizations and was a member of the Masonic order, an Elk, and member of the Knights of Pythias. He was identified with all Scandinavian Lutheran churches of Minneapolis.

Flags over the city hall, the public schools, fire engine houses and other public buildings came down to half mast as soon as Mayor W. G. Nye had learned of the death of his predecessor in office.

The raising of a fund which enabled Mr. Haynes to leave for the south, was a testimonial to him by men who had been known and respected him, was one of the last act of general interest connected with his long residence in Minneapolis. His death is soon after the return was a shock to his friends.

For Years in Politics.

Remarkable also for extraordinary political luck, Mayor Haynes combined with it a peculiarly and capacity for meeting and knowing men that was remarkable. His entry into political life by his election to the city council from the second ward in 1890, by 22 votes, was probably the most notable "luck" incident of local political history, but it took second place when he was elected mayor in 1904 by 256 votes. This was scant comfort to the cleverer, or evidence of what his political associates termed Mayor Haynes' luck' when, in the three-cornered contest between Haynes, W. E. Sutter and Thomas Van Lear, he secured 12 votes more than Satterlee and 750 more than Van Lear.

Mr. Haynes was the first democrat ever elected alderman in the second ward. In 1892, while in the council, he was nominated for mayor but was defeated by W. H. Eustis. His next appearance as a candidate for mayor was ten years later when he defeated Julius J. Heinrich for the democratic nomination, after a hard fight. At the general election he defeated Fred A. Powers. At the next election he was opposed by Dan Ryan and was again defeated, in the fall of 1900 he again opposed Mr. Jones in a hard fight and was elected. In 1903 he defeated Charles H. Haglin for mayor.

The 1910 election marked the first serious entrance of the socialist party in Minneapolis politics. Thomas H. Van Lear was the socialist candidate for mayor and the socialist campaign debate was W. E. Satterlee. Mr. Haynes was the democratic nominee and the race was so close that the results were not known until several days after the election. In the official count Mr. Haynes had a plurality of 24 votes over Mr. Satterlee and 750 over Mr. Van Lear.

James Clark Haynes was the son of James and Ellen Ann Haynes and was born Sept. 28, 1848, in a log house on his father's farm near Baldwinsville, Onondaga county, N. Y.

Olson Leaves Wife Behind.

St. Paul.—Professor Oscar M. Olson acquitted of the murder of Clyde N. Darling, has left for the home of his mother at Mountrolee, where he was said he would make a brief stay. His wife, Lillian Olson, did not accompany him, but is to join him with their daughter, Jeannette. Mrs. H. S. Anderson, 934 Barry street, an intimate friend of the Olsons, last night said: "I do not think Mr. Olson will ever come back. We do not know when Mrs. Olson will join him, or if she ever will."

Ice Condemned By Council.

Hastings.—While St. Paul people are complaining of the ensuing conditions, Hastings is wondering whether any ice is to be had here during the warm season. The city board of health sent a communication to the council condemning the Mississippi river ice, and advising that it be used only for storage purposes. The council then directed the preparing of an ordinance to conform with the recommendations. The local ice dealers harvested their ice from the river, and were prepared to open the season.

NEWSPAPER PLANT ARSON CASE

WOMAN EDITOR IS ACCUSED OF TRYING TO DESTROY OFFICE.

Mrs. Kate Sandum, Proprietress of Brisetyn, Minn., Sentinel, Under Arrest.

Blue Earth.—Mrs. Kaute Sandum, who is the proprietress and editor of the Brisetyn Sentinel, was brought here by Sheriff George N. Freer, charged with arson.

Deputy State Fire Marshal Robert J. Martin of Minneapolis and C. F. Poehnlein of St. Paul had been at Brisetyn, 15 miles southeast of this city in Faribault county, four days, prior to the arrest, securing evidence.

The preliminary hearing before Judge W. P. Drake was continued until Monday, April 28, County Attorney H. L. Bullis being the prosecuting attorney. Putnam and Carlson are Mrs. Sandum's counsel.

Thursday night, April 3, as the foreman of the Brisetyn Sentinel came into the printing office at a late hour, he discovered in a secluded spot near the newspaper press in the back of the room a barrel filled with kindling, excelsior, etc., saturated with turpentine, and old papers scattered about.

In the box was a tallow candle, burning, and the combustible material so placed that when the candle burned down it would quickly ignite the mass.

W. A. Bruce, the foreman and former editor of the Elmore Eye, quickly extinguished the flame and notified the city marshal and some others. They came at once to Sandum Temple, for the night. The next morning all the remains of the attempt at arson had been removed.

There were three keys to the printing office: one in the possession of Mr. Bruce; a school teacher, who had rooms over the office, but who was not out of the city, had another; Mrs. Sandum had the remaining one. There was $4,500 insurance on the property, which was in her name as the owner.

ARBOR DAY WILL BE MAY 2

Governor's Proclamation Is Likened Unto Spring Poem—Latest Date in Years.

St. Paul.—Governor A. O. Eberhart has just designated May 2 as Arbor day, the latest date set for this holiday in the memory of any one around the Capitol. The Governor's poetical feeling predominated when he evolved a proclamation which, except for the fact that it was issued in April most a spring poem. The Governor says in part:

"Arbor day is one of the most beautiful of our festivals. Standing alone in its established place in the calendar, it is a perfect gift of the beautiful service of power. Scattered over the hills and valleys of our state, it is the living testimony of the love of home planting the view that meets the eye in the spring time of parks of aged trees covered with the swaying canopy of leaves, and the young trees just budding into life, are the delight of every heart. Minnesota has the greatest timber resources of any state east of the Rocky mountains. She is fortunate in having such a heritage. But it is the duty of the people to preserve and increase it. Already the Big Woods, with its beautiful oak and hickory, have been cut out, and the prairies of the south and west are almost unadorned, covered, centered with the illimitable fields of grain and grass. Where once the maximum of human energy and skill, with the minimum of nature's help, produced great crops of wheat, there the land and the hungriest wilderness. Our birch and pine forests are being rapidly cut away.

"Minnesota has been progressing toward a better appreciation of arbor day and its problems. She is still making pitiful progress. Legislation has been enacted for the preservation of forests which maintain the seasonal flow of streams. The state school, agricultural college and experiment station, and the department of forestry are all engaged in the study of forestry problems. Our agricultural development can be greatly increased by planting trees for wind-belts and shelter.

"That the town which men has made its home, with all the comforts of modern times, civilization must be exercised to make it fit to live in. Trees must be planted in the streets, and the shade giving, fruit and shade trees, the orchards and groves of every home must be cared for. It is one of the lovely sympathy to contemplate, that the children of the state, on May 2, 1913, as Arbor and Bird day.

Buhl and Hibbing Protests.

St. Paul.—A delegation of Buhl citizens appeared Monday before the railroad and warehouse commission to protest against the abandonment of the Buhl depot. The delegates said that the city by the Great Northern and is building also entered a protest by telegraph. The first hearing to protest the change of service is said to have been received Saturday, when the agent at Buhl refused to take a truck. The railroad and warehouse commission was telegraphed to and at the request of Judge Ira B. Mills, the case was suspended pending a hearing was continued until next week when it is expected that Mills, Hibbing, Virginia and other range towns will be represented. The Great Northern proposes to take off two local ranger trains each way between Virginia and Hibbing and substitute one mixed train, because the company's revenues have been reduced, it is said, by the electric line to a point that makes the present service unprofitable.

Woman is Fatally Burned.

Albert Lea.—Mrs. Daniel McAlister was seriously injured by burns by fire that partially destroyed her apartment, while trying to make her escape, her clothing caught fire. She rushed into a closet and shut the door, after the fire was extinguished she was found with her clothing burned entirely off. She was hurried to the hospital where it was said she would die within a few hours. Her son, who is a driver on the city fire truck was very seriously burned attempting to rescue her.

Trefz Speaks at Winona.

Winona.—An enthusiastic meeting of over five hundred members of the Winona Association of Commerce was held here last week, when E. F. Trefz, field secretary of the United States Chamber of Commerce, gave a stirring talk on "The Influence of the Business Men to the Community and Nation," to which he took occasion to eulogize the growing importance of the business man in the affairs of the nation, and how his position was coming to be more recognized.

MAY BE GEM BROKER

"JACK LEWIS," WHOSE IDENTITY PUZZLED POLICE, POSSIBLY MINNEAPOLIS MAN.

CHARGED WITH DUPING GIRLS

"If It's True He Ought To Be Shot," Says Sheriff's Wife Out of City.

Minneapolis.—E. C. C. Von Klein, 3824 Irving avenue south, diamond broker now widely known in Minneapolis and St. Paul, is, according to the Chicago police, the man, who under the name of Jack Lewis, has been locked in a cell to Chicago since Sunday, when a young woman stopped in the Van Buskirk hotel, declared he had married her in Sun Francisco on May 1, deserted her Sept. 15 in Portland, Ore., and had taken jewelry worth $1,000 when he left.

Positive Assertion Made.

"Lewis" has been positively identified the Chicago police declare, by an Evanston police sergeant and former neighbor as Von Klein. The policeman said he had lived in the same block with Von Klein.

Following the sensational arrest in the Blackstone, Sunday, two charges of jewel robbery were made against him. The woman who claimed to be his wife accused him of the $1,000 theft. The private detective said that the prisoner had stolen diamonds worth $5,000 from Mrs. C. A. Temple of Little Rock, Ark. after courting under the name of Werner R. Clark.

The man in the cell insists that he is not Von Klein, and declares that he committed none of the acts charged to him. He refused to tell his name, address or to name his relatives.

At the Von Klein residence in Minneapolis no one was home but Marie Von Klein, a sister, just returned from a tour of the Orient and the Philippines. She was on her way to Chicago to be married to a lieutenant of the United States army whom she met to China.

Defending her brother's name, she declared she believed that if he was the man to the Chicago jail he was the victim of a plot to accuse him and throws themselves at her brother and had been spurned.

"If he has married another woman he should be shot," she declared, stoutly, "but I don't believe he did."

Mrs. Von Klein, o Minneapolis girl who married Von Klein in Minneapolis twelve years ago, is at present in Fergus Falls, Minn., visiting relatives and the sister has not seen her brother for nearly ten years. Except for the fact the husband's name the house is deserted. She has received from her husband only such friends and other relatives heard from him.

Those who know Von Klein were surprised to learn of the identification in Chicago. A prominent figure at Minneapolis theaters and cafes, well known among local sports, with a good fortune in diamonds, Von Klein has generally talked as though he was a man of wealth.

Though but 25 years old, Von Klein has always posed as a man of wide experience. In Minneapolis he said he had been in the Alaska gold fields and went through one of the hardest winters in Klondike.

Before moving to Minneapolis, Von Klein was to the diamond business in Milwaukee, according to the Chicago police. His lived at Evanston and Robert Von Klein, an Evanston resident of Chicago, declared he knew the prisoner, but would not say who he was.

Wounds Child, Commits Suicide.

Fergus Falls.—Mrs. Peter Johnson, who resides in the town of Dane Prairie, this county, committed suicide last week. Sometime during the afternoon, while her children were at school, she loaded a shotgun and then she shot her youngest daughter, aged 6, in the head with a .22 caliber rifle. The bullet stunned her, and, thinking that she had killed her mother wrapped her carefully in bed. Then she took a heavier rifle, she shot herself several times, finally placing the muzzle in her mouth, and sending a bullet through her brain. When her children arrived from school they found her body cold in death. The only child girl who was shot will probably recover. It is supposed the mother was suffering from temporary insanity.

Get-Together Banquet.

Thief River Falls.—The third monthly get-together banquet given by the Commercial club was held at the dining rooms of the Hotel Evelyn in this city Friday evening. Many invited guests from neighboring towns were in attendance. The main address of the evening was given by C. M. Johnson of Crookston, Superintendent J. H. Hay of the local schools was toastmaster. One more banquet will be held this spring.

Burglar Flies for Pants.

Minneapolis.—A nimble burglar, who left a pike pole and seated in the crotch of a tree, lifted a pair of trousers from the chair beside the bed of Frank Sabath, 3409 Fifteenth street NE., and disappeared with $27 and a gold watch chain. A second bumping sound awakened Sabath, who jumped from his bed and stepped toward a low-hurling lamp on a dresser. As he did so, he was just in time to see a long, sinewy pike pole being withdrawn through the open window at the end.

Self Destruction Defence.

Minneapolis.—Counsel for Samuel Phillips, charged with killing his wife, indicated a cross-examination of state witnesses that it would be shown that Mrs. Maria Phillips was not murdered, but died from the effects of a self-inflicted bullet wound. George Armstrong, attorney for Phillips, says he will show that Mrs. Phillips was left-handed. Dr. Harold B. Robertson, state pathologist, testified that Mrs. Phillips was shot on the left side of her head, the bullet taking an inward and upward course.

DOINGS OF THE SOLONS

Minnesota Legislative Affairs of the Past Week—Law Makers Hard at Work.

St. Paul, April 16.—Three appropriation bills, carrying disbursements of $17,667,227 have been introduced by the house committee on appropriations and the senate finance committee in both houses. This does not carry the money allowances for the state departments and institutions for the next two years, also for state aid to public schools, which has been increased by the legislature to more than $3,600,000 for the biennial period, an increase of more than $1,500,000. Other bills appropriating money have already been passed and with those yet to come the appropriations from the state revenue fund for the next two years will foll not for short of $20,000,000.

Estimated Revenue.

Estimated revenue from railroad and other special taxes for the two years is $12,000,000, including a big increase in railroad taxes. All that is appropriated in excess of $14,000,000 will have to be raised by direct levy on the real estate and personal property of the state, which is a levy of tax levy raised only about $1,200,000 in taxes, the levy will have to be about an increase over two years ago when it was 1.9 mills.

Special Levies Not Necessary.

Outside of this will come the 1-mill levy for the state university, the levy for state schools and special levies for educational buildings and the own supreme court and the governor's office building.

Figures carried in the three big appropriation bills, presented today are as follows:

	Years ending
	1914.	1915.
Educational	$5,476,000	$5,476,000
Department	2,245,859	2,257,746
Board of control	2,010,368	2,077,122
Totals	$9,732,760	$9,863,868
Immunity	1,000,000	1,000,000
Interest on state debt	1,000,000	1,000,000
Senate aid	1,250,000	1,250,000
Tax Levy to Meet	9.4 Mills	9.7 Mills

"The tax levy for state revenue purposes will be 10 mills as near as we can figure it today," said Senator Frank Clague, chairman of the senate finance committee, after the big appropriation bills were introduced. "It depends on how much there is of the minor title and additions, but we figure on a gross appropriation of $21,000,000, of which $11,000,000 is secured for by the earnings of institutions, leaving $10,000,000 to be appropriated by the legislature." The levy two years ago was 10 mills.

"Blue Sky" Law is Passed.

The Benson bill providing for a "blue sky" law to protect people against more propositions was passed by the senate yesterday afternoon. The Mc-Grath bill which places all other investment companies under the control of the state bank examiner is the control acted upon today.

The Benson bill places all insurance propositions under the control of the insurance commissioner. It also governs most contracts, stocks and bonds to be issued, etc., must be approved by the insurance commissioner before a license to do business can be granted to the promoters of the enterprise applied for the insurance commissioner does not approve of the proposition the license will not be issued. At present the insurance commissioner has control over fire insurance companies only, as now organized. This law will give the insurance commissioner more control of companies during the progress of their organization.

St. Paul, April 17.—Without a dissenting vote the senate committee of the house bill to appropriate $52,000 for the expenses of the state militia, so fought in the battle of Gettysburg on their trip to the semi-centennial celebration of that event this summer. The governor will sign the bill immediately.

House Kills Public Utilities.

The Olson bill to create a board was killed in the lower house of the legislature by a vote of 56 to 51. The vote was largely on party lines, only Albert Pfaender of New Ulm and S. R. Child out of the republican membership members were practically unanimous against the measure. Among those who voted the Miloeette bill, drafted by a Democratic committee, which has already passed the house and is under consideration in the senate.

The Kingsley bill had been made a special order in the senate for next Tuesday afternoon. The Kingsley bill places in the house, it is probable that this bill will be the one acted upon.

Primary Election To Governor.

There are five changes of intense importance to the people of Minnesota to meets bill, finally agreed upon by senate and house conferees, and which will be sent to the governor for his signature.

One of the most important of all is the provision which prohibited filing by petition after the primaries.

Non-partisanism is further extended by two amendments, one of which makes the legislative candidates get their votes the non-partisan class and the other which puts all county offices on a non-partisan basis.

This bill is said to be of advantage to the Democrats who have been somewhat in the minority. They are overjoyed at the outlook.

The "Bull Moose" party is given recognition in another amendment, which gives official recognition to any party having polled 1 per cent vote at the previous election, which the Bull Moosers did.

Last of all is a switch in primary day. It is changed from the third Tuesday in September to the third Tuesday in June. This leaves the way open for a long, long campaign after the primaries. It was the senate which made the change and the house at first refused to concur in it.

Bill Passes After Battle.

A battle, somewhat dramatic, and which at times threatened to terminate in physical encounters, waged over the workingmen's compensation bill in the house afternoon and much of last night in the house of representatives, ending finally in the passage of the bill as five amendments in which the senate probably will concur. The vote was 102 to 1. None of the amendments are of great importance.

Briefly the bill sets a fixed price for each injury. A hand is paid for at a fixed price. So is an eye, a finger, a toe, a foot.

Optional With Employer.

It is left optional with the employer whether he desires to operate under the terms of the bill. But it is made distinctly to his advantage if a workman is injured, his benefit shall affect immediately to the event that he is disabled for a time, he is paid his benefit for a shorter period, he receives only his medical expenses. Under the senate bill the benefit would become expensive until two weeks after the injury.

A second amendment increases the maximum weekly benefit received as per pension from $100 to $195 during a period of 96 days, except the injury.

Further amendment was made instructing the labor commissioner to instruct the attorney general as to their rights under the law and its working and make recommendations for improvements at succeeding legislature.

St. Paul, April 11.—Unless the senate steps in, which it is likely to do, the house investigation of all state departments, will be in the hands of Speaker Wilson tomorrow. It was yesterday tq lift the proposed inquiry above the plane of politics, as suggested by Senator Benson, and it is a constructive, scientific, businesslike investigation.

The bill the house passed seeks to make the governor's office politics proof. It contains a clause which expressly prohibits the commission from having a member of the governor's staff a year from next fall and requires a bipartisan board afterward. While it gives a co-political first glance at the appointive commission those who are afraid that it will turn out to be a "snap bill" say that the beartings will show that neither this will offer any desired opportunity for mud throwing.

Sergeant-at-Arms Controversy.

Passage of the Bendixen 5-cent fare law, which was stood at last of the course to the state of Minnesota, became assured last night, when it was announced that a compromise of the house vote of the senate committee on railroads had been framed. While the bill has already passed the house.

The measure provides that any railroad which earns annually more than $1,200 a mile can not charge more than 2 cents a mile for passenger transportation, every railroad in the state.

Under the 2-cent fare law under the same law. It has been upheld by the supreme court there. The bill is to be applied to every line of railroad which earns $1,200 a mile on its gross, and not successfully attack the justice of the proposed rate.

Senate Divides Counties.

Senator Pugh, the oldest member of the upper body, and James P. Boyle, one of the members from Ramsey county, were opposed on the county division bill, designed for the purpose of permitting the people of a county to vote on whether to submit consideration the question of the location of the proposed county seat. It is a fight between the people and the big city of Duluth. The two senators from Duluth, Chadbourne and Pugh, led the fight against the bill. Senator Marvin was the chief opponent of the measure.

MAY CALL AN EXTRA SESSION

Governor Demands Passage of Comprehensive Public Utilities Bill.

St. Paul.—In a message transmitted to the house, the governor threatens to call an extra session of the legislature unless a comprehensive public utilities act is passed. At the same time he vetoes the Nolan bill providing for local control of public utilities, declaring that such control must necessarily be both inefficient and expensive.

Regulation Is Essential.

"Statewide regulation, he says, is essential in order to secure uniformity in determining valuation, issuing securities, and in securing a proper method of accounting without which intelligent rate making is impossible.

The text of the governor's veto message is as follows:

Hon. Henry Rines,

Speaker of the House of Representatives,

Capitol.

Sir:

I have the honor herewith to return to you, without my approval, House File No. 207.

"A Bill for an Act to amend Section 2842 of the Revised Laws of 1905 relating to the state and local control of public service corporations." passed by House February 1, 1913, and received by me April 11th, 1913.

This bill provides that in every city or village in the state the right and power "to prescribe and limit the charges which any public service corporation, other than railroad companies, may demand or receive for the commodities or services furnished by it to the municipality and to the inhabitants thereof by amending Section 2842 Revised Laws of 1905, which now reads as follows:

"The state shall at all times have the right to supervise and regulate the business methods and management of any such corporation, and from time to time to fix the compensation which it may charge for its services; and every such corporation obtaining a franchise from a city or village, shall be subject to the provisions of all restrictions as from time to time may be imposed once it by such municipality."

The words just quoted are taken from the existing law, and if the amendment thereto contained in House File 207 has any effect whatever it is to confer power on municipalities over public service corporations other than those owned by the state, and is diametrically opposed to the principle of state control of such corporations.

Governor Gives Reasons.

I therefore return House File No. 207 without my approval for the following reasons:

1. Effective regulation of public utilities is essential in order to apply the public with modern economies as it is a nonsense cost, the only effect or alternative being public ownership.

2. The experience of the past has demonstrated that the local municipalities have been unable to secure such regulation and the trend of all modern legislation, both state and national, and legislation has been toward state regulation.

3. The average municipality cannot afford such regulation because of the expense to securing information, employing the necessary experts while the state can furnish the right to the same without duplication at a much smaller expense to each.

4. Many of the utilities; such as street and interurban railways, water power and telephones are interstate in principal and cannot come completely under local control.

5. Complete regulation is essential in order to secure uniformity in determining valuation, issuing securities and to securing a proper method of accounting, without which intelligent regulation is impossible.

6. The regulation of public utilities by local municipalities would not only too expensive by reason of duplication, but ineffective because of diffuse regulative power and responsibility.

During the last primary and election campaign the question of state control of public utilities was a leading issue before the people, and without the state endorsed the same in its platform.

3. There is today a genuine demand for state control of utilities, and such regulation and progressive legislation has been largely responsible for the cause of good government have secured. The most signal progress in service performed by Senator LaFollette, the governor of Wisconsin, and President Wilson while governor of New Jersey in their respective states was the establishment of an appointive public utilities commission.

States Generally Have Acted.

More than one-half of the states have enacted such legislation and in many of the remaining states similar legislation is now pending.

10. Effective regulation is right to principle, sound to policy and most successful in application.

11. Wisconsin has been a leader in the field of progressive legislation and to take a step backward by destroying or even delaying state regulation of public utilities.

12. Telephone companies are exempted from House File 207. Assuming that cities and villages should be given power to fix the charges of public service corporations, there is no reason why telephone companies should be exempted from the exercise of the same power.

13. March 5, 1913, the House pashed House File 573—"A Bill for an Act to regulate telephone companies and to place them under the control and jurisdiction of the Railroad and Warehouse commission."

This bill expressly provides for state control of telephone companies, thereby recognizing the principle and approving the policy of state control of public utilities. It is, therefore, inconsistent with the principle of local control as expressed in House File 207.

Cannot Be Reconciled.

The two bills cannot be reconciled to principle or policy. The House having recognized the principle of state control as to telephone companies, cannot consistently oppose the same policy as to other public utilities.

14. Whatever other values may be in local municipal regulation is already secured to our municipalities under the provisions for Home Rule Charters, and if the exercise of any control power is not to secure such regulation by the adoption of an effective Home Rule charter, it should not be forced to do so by this proposed law.

As most of the important legislation of this session is now disposed of, there is still ample time for the enactment of a strong and effective public utilities law at this session.

I therefore call the attact such a law before the session expires, I will at a convenient time during the present year, call an extra session for that purpose.

Respectfully submitted,

ADOLPH O. EBERHART,

Governor.

Omnibus Salary Bill Passes.

The house yesterday passed the omnibus salary bill, and introduced by the appropriations committee. The bill provides increases to salaries for the secretary of state, the state treasurer, the public examiner, the state auditor and the governor's secretary and the state auditor. A salary of $4,000 a year is fixed for the state auditor. The other state officers are allowed $4,500.

WEALTHY FARMER IS MISSING

Police Seek Richard Molter, Who Had $1,500 When Last Heard From.

Fergus Falls.—The police of Breckenridge and Wahpeton have been asked to investigate the disappearance of Richard Molter of this city. He recently purchased a large farm in the extreme part of Richland county and who has failed to arrive to take possession of it. He is known to have several years near Hermon, Grant county, and a few weeks ago he bought the Furness farm of Fergus Falls, for $50,000. He paid cash for it, and also bought the worth of livestock belonging to Mr. Furnier.

Molter left his home at Herman on the night of April 3 to take possession, coming by way of Breckenridge and Wahpeton where he stopped for several days to follow a week later. They arrived at the farm yesterday and it was established to find that he was out there. He had about $1,500 in cash and notes on his person and it is feared he has met with foul play at Wahpeton or Breckenridge before he had to stop over between trains.

Duluth Plans Reforms.

Duluth.—Duluth is now under its commission government. Mayor W. J. Prince is the executive and commissioner of public affairs; Fred W. Voss became commissioner of finance and control and Frank Jones, commissioner of public utilities; W. Mahlum was elected commissioner of public safety, and Roderick Murchison, commissioner of streets and public works. The commission is a unit on the question of law enforcement. The first week or so at least, saloons must close at 11 p. m., and the Sunday side doors must be closed. The segregated district and hotels and houses of ill fame must be closed, saloons must be wiped out, according to the new commissioners. Judges have been notified that the slightest laxity fights so common to Duluth in the past, not cases.

I may your brothers follow the same example." In conclusion King George declares his love for Queen Olgo and urges the son to love and protect her.

Some wise man once remarked that the rain falls upon the just and the unjust without discrimination. He might have added, however, yesterday's shower fell on dusty roads and sprinkled paint work, nearly garden and repleted cinder path, it didn't fall on the Zeh household. To every other man in Minnesota yesterday's sky was cloudy; for the sun was hemmed and the birds sang. It it rained he didn't know it. His cloude all were their silver lining outside yesterday. The reason for it is Fred Zeh, junior, who arrived at 1657 South Fifth street west yesterday morning. When Fred, pere, walked down town yesterday morning the street was almost too narrow for him. He hasn't decided yet whether to make the young master president of th United States, a contiping lady in the state of Minnesota or a printer. He will probably become a printer, for he must have inherited some of his father's ability. Buick

Buick Goes Anywhere Any Other Car Does

"I drove a Buick 32,000 miles, and was never detained on the road a minute for anything but tire trouble. Last year I bought another Buick, and have driven 11,000 miles without even taking out a spark plug or touching a wrench to the motor. I am an engine builder myself, and know good machinery when I see it. I am sure that no other car for the same money will give as good results, and I know that there are many cars that cost twice as much that will not give any better service. The Buick can go anywhere any other car can, and where a good many other cars can't.—Uri Tracy, Finch Company, Rochester, N. Y.

The Famous Buick Overhead Valve Motor is guaranteed to have more power and more speed than any other type of motor on the market. It will pull stronger on low grade gasoline than any other type of motor ever built, and the fuel consumption is less.

SCHOOL HOUSE DESTROYED BY FIRE

HIGH SCHOOL BUILDING IS IN RUINS—INSURANCE PARTLY COVERS LOSS.

FIRE OCCURRED EARLY WEDNESDAY MORNING—NO CHANCE TO SAVE BUILDING.

What was once the Red Lake Falls high school building is now a mass of ruins. Not only the building but everything in it was destroyed by fire early Wednesday morning.

It is not quite true to say that everything was destroyed. About 5 o'clock a small boy was approaching a crowd of boys who were taking a natural interest in the smouldering fire when one of the "fellers" made a discovery.

"Look there," he exclaimed. "That kid's saved his 'rithmetic. He does, for fair." But the kid showed fight and they didn't get his book. Perhaps he didn't know that work is to be resumed Tuesday morning.

One little girl exclaimed, "Well, there wasn't a single 'P' on my report card." It is probable that very few "P's" did burn. And anyhow, cards with many marks like that ought to burn.

Aside from the books that had been taken home by pupils every thing was burned.

The alarm was turned in between twelve and one o'clock Wednesday morning. When discovered there was a lively blaze in the third story, in the laboratory or in that part of the building. Shortly after the alarm was sounded the flames shot through the roof and by the time the firemen were prepared to put up a fight the upper part of the building was all aflame and there was no chance of saving anything. Attention was turned to the protection of other property. However, there was little danger of the fire spreading, for no buildings were located near the school house and there was little wind.

The building and contents were insured for about $15000. The building probably could not be rebuilt for less than twice that amount. It was a frame building and had served the people of the district for many years. For that reason it will not be considered such a great loss as would the destruction of a modern school building.

The origin of the fire is unknown.

SPELLING CONTEST

School Children of County Will Compete—Winner of Contest to State Fair.

A spelling contest to be participated in by the public school children of the county will be held in Red Lake Falls in connection with a school officers' meeting early in July.

Each rural school may send one contestant for the county contest. Graded schools may be represented by pupils of the sixth and seventh grade only. Each contestant will be asked to contribute 10 cents to a fund to be used to pay a part of the expenses of the winning contestant's visit to the state fair in September.

The winner of the county contest is to have the honor of representing Red Lake county in a state spelling contest to be held at the state fair.

This contest should not be confused in any way with the essay contest for which the prize is a trip to the state fair and a week at the fair with all expenses paid. There is no connection between the two contests.

SPECIAL CORN CONTEST FOR FAIR

NEARLY ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS OFFERED IN SPECIAL PRIZES.

The officers of the Red Lake County Agricultural society have decided to offer some especially liberal cash prizes for farmers who will this season put in 15 acres of corn and make exhibits form the field at the county fair.

The part of the premium list governing this feature is as follows:

Lot 11. For the largest and best field, not less than 15 acres, of Dent Corn, any variety, grown in the West half of the county. . . . . 1st. 2nd. 3rd. $20. $10. $ 5.

Sweepstakes on Nos. 10 and 11. . . . . $ 25.00

The dividing line for this purpose shall be the township lines between Terrebonne and Red Lake Rivers, Gervais and Emardville, and on north to Pennington County line.

100 best ears must be exhibited by the fair. Contestants must signify their intention to compete before June 15th, 1913, if possible, so a committee may at any time inspect the fields. Blanks will be furnished contestants and they are expected to fill those out properly and deliver same to the Board of Directors the first day of the fair. In awarding the prizes the size and condition of the field as well as the maturity and quality of the corn will be considered. Contestants must furnish information as to the date planted, the treatment of the soil before and after planting, number of times plowed, etc., etc.

FREE VISIT TO THE STATE FAIR

PRIZE TO BE WON BY SOME BRIGHT RED LAKE COUNTY BOY.

So successful was the Farm Boys' Camp at the State Fair and Exposition of 1912, that the management has determined to make it an annual feature. The purpose of this camp is to offer the best practical advantages of the State Fair to the farm boys of the state, and to encourage a greater interest in the fair by expecting delegations from eighty-eight counties its real worth, through the boys who annually are members of the State Fair Camp, to the whole-wide awake, enthusiastic and energetic boys of the state, to the end that the 1913 Fair, is a real live boosters' fair, for the good of the public county and the community. No boy will be permitted to remain over long ad more and better live stock.

Not only will the boys be assigned bring to the fair one boy from each county, but they will be required to select two boys from each of the nine congressional districts in the state, who were members of the 1912 Camp, in addition to these, there are to act as guides and assist Supt. Hilbert in looking after the welfare of the boys. This selection will be made from among the boys who submitted essays following the last Fair, no two boys from the same county of the year will be composed of 104 of the brightest and most intelligent farm boys in the state.

The basis of selection of boys will be made by a local committee composed of the county superintendent of schools, the county agent, the board of county commissioners and another selected by them. The committee will mark all essays submitted. The applicant must be of good moral character; willing to co-operate in making the assignment a success; be between the ages of sixteen and nineteen years, and be actual residents and workers upon a farm. No boy who was a member of the Farm Boys' Camp at the 1912 State Fair, or who has ever been regularly enrolled in any special school or college of agriculture, in the or any other state, will be allgible to compete. (This does not exclude boys who have attended agricultural departments in High Schools.)

Each boy making application will be required to write an essay, of if not less than 400 or more than 700 words upon one of the following subjects, to-wit: Corn, Cattle, Hogs, Clover, Alfalfa, and their relation to farming in Minnesota.

All essays must be in the hands of the local committee before the first day of June. The committee will read and mark them at once and notify the Secretary of the State Fair on or before June tenth of the name and address of the boy standing highest,which boy will be the one entitled to the free trip to the State Fair, as a member of the Farm Boys' Encampment from his county. The local committee will keep a record of all the contestants and the boys standing second and third in their markings will be designated as first and second alternates, the first alternate to be selected in case the winner cannot go to the Fair, and the second alternate to be selected in case both the winner and the first alternate cannot go.

This surely is a prize worth striving for. All of the expenses of the trip, including car fare, admission to the fair grounds, board for the week, are to be paid by the state fair association. It costs nothing to compete. Boys should get their blanks and all information necessary by calling on or writing to Albany DeForge, superintendent of schools, Red Lake Falls.

The most famous comedy drama, "Senator Swanson," will be produced at Lotus Theatre, Thursday, May 8th. It is one of the most remarkable dramas of modern times, and has all the essentials of success. First it has a tremendous plot, which is worked out with admirable power. Second it has an abundance of clever comedy, and it is a true picture of human life in every way. The author has seized upon the salient points in domestic life and has transferred them to the stage with fidelity of nature. The results are a play that appeals to people of all classes in life. It has been one of the most successful plays on the road for the past six seasons and has created keen interest wherever it has been produced. This is the first western tour of the play and the first season outside of the largest cities.—Adv.

HEAVY LOSS SUFFERED BY FIRE

TEN HORSES AND THREE COWS WERE BURNED WITH BARN.

In a fire that destroyed a barn on the Bjergo farm in Lake Pleasant township, now owned by H. A. Columbus, ten horses and three cows belonging to A. S. Worden and his son-in-law, Mr. Christensen, who had leased the farm, were burned to death.

The fire was discovered between nine and ten o'clock Sunday night. Mr. Worden and Mr. Christensen completed doing their evening chores shortly before 9 o'clock and were sitting in the house when, shortly after 9:30 o'clock, their attention was attracted by a reflection on the wall. Then they found was caused by the burning barn.

When they hurried to the barn, the fire had then made such headway that it was impossible for any one to get inside of the building and nothing in the building was saved. Ten horses, three cows, five set of work horses, hay and other feed were destroyed. Fortunately a few barrels of water were standing near the house and Mr. Worden and Mr. Christensen and neighbors were able to keep the fire from spreading to the granary which stood near the barn.

Mr. Worden places his and his father-in-law's loss at something more than $2000 with no insurance. They carried insurance to insure, but the policy had not been written. The barn, which was one for Messrs. Worden and Christensen and is especially at this season of the year.

The origin of the fire is unknown.

Mr. Worden says indications point strongly to incendiarism but cannot say who they are nor should desire to burn his property.

FUGITIVE CAPTURED AND PLEADS GUILTY

PIERRE LAJAMBE DRAWS SENTENCE OF FIFTY DOLLARS OR NINETY DAYS.

Pierre Lajambe, who was indicted by the Red Lake county grand jury two years ago and had been a fugitive from justice since that time, was captured last Friday by Fred Cyr, chief of police. Though the authorities had been looking for Lajombe, it was not until last week that he was located on a small farm just over the Wisconsin state line. Since his rather hurried departure from Red Lake county he had been living on the farm and occupied himself with the care of some dairy cows and chickens

Lajambe was brought to Red Lake Falls Saturday. He expressed a desire to plead guilty to the charge of selling liquor without a license and was taken to Crookston for sentence by Judge Watts. Sheriff Feltman, County Attorney Bingham and C. W. Johnson, clerk of court, went over to Crookston with the prisoner Monday for the final disposition of his case.

Lajambe plead guilty and was sentenced to pay a fine of $50 and costs amounting to $180 in all, or spend ninety days in the county jail.

He paid the fine, the costs yesterday and has returned to his Wisconsin farm.

The particular offence with which Lajambe was charged was the selling of liquor at Brooks at a time when the town was presumed to be "dry."

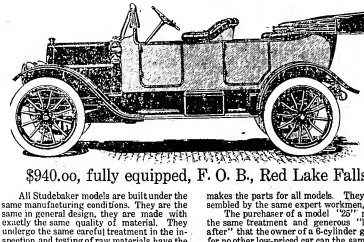
Studebaker



$940.00, fully equipped, F. O. B., Red Lake Falls

All Studebaker models are built under the same manufacturing conditions. They are the same in general design, they are made with exactly the same quality of material. They undergo the same careful treatment in the inspection and testing of raw materials, have the same high grade workmanship, careful assembling, accurate and painstaking inspection and thorough testing.

The manufacturing of the model "25" is not slighted in any way, because it is low-priced.

This is characteristic of the Studebaker policy.

We believe that anything that is worth doing at all, is worth doing well.

Studebaker quality is insisted upon in all Studebaker products regardless of price.

All Studebaker motors follow the same design and are built in the same way.

In fact, the entire mechanism is practically the same in all cars with the exception of one or two distinguishing features.

The steels, bronzes and babbits used are same. The method of assembling is the same. The same high-grade automatic machinery makes the parts for all models. They are assembled by the same expert workmen.

The purchaser of a model "25" receives the same treatment and generous "looking-after" that the owner of a 6-cylinder gets,and for no other low-priced car can the same thing be said.

We make this claim for every Studebaker Car—that in quality of material, in method of manufacture and in skillful workmanship, Studebrker automobiles are not excelled by any cars built, no matter what the price.

This claim is justified because it is true. With every car we sell goes a pledge of business honor which rests upon sixty years of Studebaker success and fair dealing.

We have told you a little about these cars because we hope above all things, that every prospective buyer will make a most searching examination of the car he proposes to buy. Studebaker cars are honest down to the last detail of construction and they will reward a buyer with years of satisfying service. Think over these things and take an opportunity to see for yourself the marvelous values which you will find in Studebaker automobiles.

BELGIAN STRIKE OFF

GOVERNMENT YIELDS TO ADVICE OF KING—ACCEPTS COMPROMISE.

NATION HAS LOST MILLIONS

Demonstration for Manhood Suffrage Has Been Expensively Unsatisfactory—Committee to Revise Constitution.

Brussels, April 24.—Owing in great part to the advice of the king, the government accepted the compromise proposed by the liberal leader, P. Nasseo, and the great conflict for manhood suffrage, which, on account of the remarkable discipline maintained, the solidarity of those who joined in the movement and their skilful organization, is unique in history, is being called off.

Views Changed.

Only a week ago the Belgian premier, Charles De Broqueville, declared:

"No government could yield to a strike of this nature. To yield would be to abdicate."

Nevertheless, the strike seems to have made sufficient impression on the government to induce it to recede from its uncompromising attitude for exactly to secure the termination of a condition which has already cost the country many millions and is daily driving away from manufacturers customers they may never win back.

The decision to accept the compromise was reached Monday by the cabinet and the premier announced in the chamber of deputies Tuesday that the government had made M. Nasson's motion its own.

The Socialists Are Satisfied.

The Socialists generally appear to be satisfied with the result. M. Destree said afterwards that the second part of the motion—that the chamber disapproves and condemns the general strike—was unimportant.

"It was," he added, "only tautological and was put in to emphasize and radiate the club."

The Socialist members were escorted by an imposing cortege of strikers from the chamber. Later, some of them delivered speeches. M. Vondervelde, the Socialist leader, summed up the situation thus: "We donot yet are not enthusiastic. You expect us to hood you universal suffrage on a silver salver. You are furious because we could not do so. But there are people a good deal more furious than you—the hand of fanatics who had to restrain the irrepressible desperations when to the midst of the strike he was obliged to speak out more clearly then he had ever done before with the result a liberal motion, paving the way for a revision of the constitution.

"You have gained a victory, but it is now a question of victor or vanquished. The great fact is that the morrow will bring revision and justice."

Five Parliamentary Committees.

It is stated that an extra parliamentary committee will be appointed by the chamber and king to consider and report on the question of constitutional revision. This committee will be composed or deputies and eminent scientists, jurists and others.

It will prepare before the session of the chamber decided to call a meeting of the extra-parliamentary committee to revobe a national congress of the Belgian public whose powers, comprising 1,000 representatives of all the unions. This congress to be empowered to terminate the general strike.

There is undoubtedly much dissatisfaction among the socialists and it is on the figures of the Bell telephone system, which announces gross receipts of $193,200,00 for a single year.

The strikers who feel that they must wait one long for the desired reform. But the leaders are unanimous to their wish to end the strike.

Two Appropriation Bills Pass.

Washington, April 24.—By an overwhelming vote the house passed the sundry civil appropriation bill with a provision to carry out the anti-trust law for the prosecution of labor unions and farmers' cooperative associations. An attempt to strike out the provision, which caused Speaker Champion Clark and President Taft to veto the measure in the last part of the Sixty-second congress, was defeated by a vote of 47 to 198. The indigo appropriation bill, which failed at the last congress, also was passed.

Miss Harraden stated that she had refused to pay the tax as a protest against the deception practiced by the government on the suffragettes which led the suffragettes to militancy, and as a protest against forcibly feeding and the "cat and mouse" bill. e measure particularly obnoxious to omen's rights advocates.

TREATY ABROGATION IS ASKED

WOULD TERMINATE PACTS WITH GREAT BRITAIN.

Contended U. S. Did Not Intend Treaties Should Interfere With Canal Control.

Washington, April 23—A demand for abrogation of two treaties with Great Britain bearing upon inhabitant canal rights, prescribed to the senate in a resolution by Senator Chamberlain, brought a new element into the canal controversy now in progress between this country and Great Britain over the right of the United States to exempt American coastwise ships from the payment of tolls.

Senator O'Gorman, chairman of the inter-oceanic canals committee, which must handle canal legislation in the senate, has indorsed the principle embodied in the Chamberlain resolution.

The Chamberlain resolution would require the president to proceed to terminate the Hay-Pauncefote treaty of 1901 and the Clayton-Bulwer treaty of 1852, which it superseded.

In a statement Senator Chamberlain said the treaties and records would show that the United States never planned to give Great Britain such treaty rights at would justify the protest the country has made.

Senator O'Gorman said:

"Senator Chamberlain's resolution is a more concrete statement of the policies I took in the last session, that if the Hay-Pauncefote treaty justifies Great Britain in making the protest now before our government, then it would be well if means could be found to abrogate the treaty."

The new angle to the situation brought many interviewers to the senate. ' Senator O'Gorman declared at the close of the session that he doubted very much the resolution would get by a large majority if it came to a vote.

The meeting of the inter-oceanic canals committee was postponed until next Tuesday. Senator Root's bill for a repeal of the free toll provision is now before the committee.

It was apparent that much of the support that was mustered in the last session to prevent the charges of free tolls providing will now be brought to the support of plan to abrogate treaties that may be interpreted as that Great Britain any ground for protest.

$100,000 Fire at Iron Balt, Wis.

Ironwood, Mich., April 23.—Eight buildings were totally destroyed by fire at Iron Belt, Wis. The Ironwood fire department was called and went on a special train. The fire originated in A. K. Hill's store. The estimated loss is one hundred thousand dollars. The buildings burned were: Jackson & Hicks' general store, Hill's general store, Mason & Smith's lumber office, Jackson & Hicks' paint shop and four residences.

Evidences of a Bloody Battle.

Youngstown, Ohio, April 22.—The dead body of a man was found in a box car in Lowellville and lying near by was a gun. The weapon evidently battered with an axe and probably fatally injured. The names of the dead and injured are not known to the village authorities.

Society Dances Are Worst.

Boston, April 22.—Society dances eclipse, in boldness, anything attempted on the public halls and are mainly responsible for the abuses developed in the dance halls," declares Mayor John F. Fitzgerald. The mayor's statement was made in connection with an assertion that unless dance hall conditions in Boston are improved, he will close up "the most offensive places" and might be compelled to adopt a uniform hour for closing either midnight or 1 o'clock, for all other hall rooms.

Trouble With Moros Averted.

Washington, April 22.—Trouble with the Moros, the warlike Philippine tribesmen which threatened the peace of mind of the war department for several weeks, has been averted. Reports to the department says the army of belligerent tribesmen, numbering 3,000, which practically laid siege to Jolo and dared the American garrison to venture forth and do battle, has dispersed and that only a few Moros have refused to be reconciled. The Moros threatened to revolt because of reports of agitators.

BRYAN WANTS PEACE

POLICY OF SECRETARY OF STATE BASED ON "SOBER SECOND THOUGHT."

TREATIES WITH ALL NATIONS

Would Establish An International Court—Temporary Limitation On Armament and War Preparations Striking Feature.

Washington, April 23.—William J. Bryce, secretary of state, is about to launch his first distinctive policy of international importance. It is a plan for the promotion of world peace, which contemplates the negotiation of treaties between the United States and all the civilized nations of the earth.

An Original Feature.

It will have as its most original feature a suggestion of temporary limitation on the armament and war preparations of the signatory powers.

Same As Taft's Motive.

The Bryan plan aims at the same end which the Taft scheme of general arbitration treaties seeks.

Members of the senate have learned as yet only a general outline of the Bryan plan, but that is sufficient to indicate that Mr. Bryan, like Secretary Knox, hopes to promote world peace through setting up internal machinery which will open the way for nations to cool off and settle differences that are not to be binding on either nation.

But pending the arbitration the despatch parties under the terms of the proposed treaties, will be bound to make no changes in their military strength, nor to increase their armaments, mobilize troops, or in any way change the military status as it existed at the beginning of the controversy.

The entire ground work of the Bryan plan seems to consist in the fact that the contending nations only have the opportunity for a calm second thought and for relief from the incidental irritation that comes from war preparations, the chances are that armed conflict will be avoided.

In some of its details the Bryan plan resembles that outlined recently by Secretary Knox and which is embodied in the fragmentary remains of the general arbitration treaties ratified by the senate.

TO KEEP TROOPS ON BORDER

STAY IN TEXAS WILL BE A LONG ONE, SAYS WOOD.

Man Will Be Moved "When Causes for Mobilization are Removed."

Galveston, Tex., April 23—Major General Leonard Wood, chief of the staff, declares that the second division of the United States will remain mobilized at Galveston and Texas City until the causes of mobilization are removed.

"I do not know just how long the division will remain mobilized" he said, "nor does any other man know. The division will remain any length of time, from one week to one year. I am sure the stay will be a long one, six months or longer."

General Wood, who is on a tour of inspection of border camps, visited Fort Crocket here and expressed satisfaction concerning camp conditions. Training of the men in maneuvers and mobilization would be valuable to the army, he declared and directed that the greatest attention be given to the solution of the transportation problem. He insisted that the availing of a plan for the distribution of supplies for an army to the field is all important. General Wood was especially interested in the use of motor trucks, six of which are now in use by the division.

The Texas City camp will be inspected next. General Wood, with his aide, Captain Powell Clayton, will leave after that for Douglas. He will meet Governor Brownsville along the Rio Grande to El Paso and Douglas Ariz. He will return to Washington from Nogales.

REVENGE THEORY IS UPHELD

Letter Declares That Dietz Was Killed For Reasons Given in

Chicago, April 22—Coroner Hoffman has received a letter purporting to come from the murderers of Georges six months ago. Hoffman charged he killed in his bed by hammer blows, a week ago Sunday. Unlike numerous other letters, obviously from "cranks," the contents of this letter bore the stamp of truth, according to the coroner.

An attempt was made to conceal the identity of the writer, but detectives were dispatched to the farm west of Chicago, on hotel stationery of which the letter was written. The trail was lost in divulge to the town.

The letter asserted that Dietz was not slain by his wife or by George Nornberg, both of whom are under arrest charged with the crime, but was killed for revenge, as was stated by the letter found at the murdered man's side.

New Dances are Barred.

La Crosse, Wis., April 24.—Restrained Pastor Elliott Cotton of the state normal school cancelled a contract with an instructor of New York city, who came here to teach the normal teachers the latest steps in dancing. All the "dancing master" was engaged to teach the high school pupils. The instruction will be confined to "folk and classical dancing."

Baggage Rates Investigation.

Washington, April 23.—Every railway line in the country was a defendant in a formal decree by the interstate commerce commission in a decision rendered by which the Baggage committee attacking, as illegal and unjust, the excess baggage rates enacted by the carriers. To an extent likewise, every traveler who has ever had occasion to pay $1.50 pounds is a party in interest.

Four years ago the railroads increased their charge for excess weight of baggage.

Illinois to Celebrate Douglas Day.

Springfield, Ill., April 22.—The celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Stephan A. Douglas, illinois' greatest Democrat, will be the feature of the coming week in the state general assembly. The celebration will take place Wednesday afternoon in Representatives' hall at a joint meeting of the two branches of the legislature. A number of notables will participate in the program, including United States Senators Sherman and Lewis.

DRASTIC ALIEN BILL

NEW LAND BILL AIMED DIRECTLY AT JAPANESE AND CHINESE.

PUSHED BY MAJORITY PARTY

Democrats, With Eyes Upon Washington, Draw Up Milder One—Governor Defends State's Right to Legislate.

Sacramento, Cal., April 23.—Two new bills dealing with the question of land ownership by aliens to California, each representing the view of a considerable faction in the legislature, will be offered and voted on by the senate this week.

To Prepare Drastic Law.

Through agreement reached by leaders of the majority party a drastic law, directed solely against the Japanese and Chinese, will be prepared as a substitute for the Thompson-Birdsall measure, and probably will be passed. If not, an eod will have come to the anti-alien land legislation at this session, floor leaders declare. It is now planned to throw out, entirely, the guarded language of the Thompson-Birdsall bill and put in its place more simplified provisions.

1.—No alien who is ineligible to citizenship shall be permitted to acquire and hold land in California for a period of more than one year after the date of such acquisition.

2.—No corporation, the majority of stock of which is held by aliens who are ineligible to citizenship, shall be permitted to acquire and hold land, except for one year.

Democrats to Oppose.

Agreed on this procedure are Andrew E. Boynton, president pro tem and floor leader of the upper house; Senator Loe C. Gates, chairman of the Judiciary committee; Senator R. W. Thompson, chairman of the committee on revenue and taxation, and others. They will be opposed by several of the Democratic leaders who expressed themselves on the floor of the senate as standing against the use of the words "ineligible to citizenship" in describing aliens to whom it is sought to restrict.

The plan is in direct opposition to the suggestions contained in the telegram which Governor Johnson received from Secretary Bryan of the state department last week and the Democrats decided to offer a bill which will confine the restriction to "aliens who have not declared their intention to become citizens, according to law."

Bill Is Described.

The bill which the Democratic leaders are now proposing substantially the original Democratic bill, while the latter was pending towards the end of the original administration bill.

Governor Defends Criticism.

Governor Johnson gave out a statement regarding the anti-alien land legislation. This is the first statement the governor has made on the subject, and follows, in part:

"Californians are unable to understand why an alien ineligible within the jurisdiction of the California legislature, by the purchase of an alien land bill, creates tumult, confusion and criticism, and why the local act, of undoubted right, becomes an international question. Of course, the California legislature would not attempt to contravent any treaty of the nation. Its legislation has been done by the federal government itself and many other states. To say that the act is unfriendly to Japan is objected to harsh criticism and the charge of disregard of friendly relations with foreign powers, is to deny to California what has been freely accorded to every other state in the union, and what has never been questioned by the federal courts.

"Our legislature is now considering an alien land bill in general language and not discriminatory. If terms are used which will be construed to discriminate, those very terms logg since were made so by many enactments of the laws of the United States itself. Broadly speaking, many states have endeavored to prevent the ownership of land by those ineligible to citizenship. That there is ease with which, as conceded, but immediately upon the exercise of the power by a great sovereign state, a reasonable and not objectionable outcry is heard all over the land and in other lands as well."

Points to Other Laws.

The governor then cites the laws of many other states to prove that California is not over-stepping her legal rights in enacting the proposed alien law.

De La Barra Asks Explanation.

Mexico City, April 24.—It is stated that Francisco de la Barra, Mexican ambassador to the United States, has complained through the Mexican embassy at Washington of the conduct of General William Canada at Vera Cruz, who is alleged to have prevented the landing of arms for the use of Ambassador of Dr. Francisco Vasquez Gomez.

Fight Over Tariff Measure.

Washington, April 22.—Two weeks of tariff debate behind closed doors will be followed early this week by the opening of the real fight over the Democratic tariff bill on the floor of the house. Based on the favorable decisions of the Democratic house caucus and bearing the approval of President Wilson in several of his messages, the bill will reappear on the floor of the house by Wednesday, ready for the fight that is to be waged there over its passage.

Children Forgetting How to Play.

Chicago, April 22.—That children of the present generation are forgetting how to play in spite of the assertion of superior opportunities afforded them for healthful amusement, was the assertion of Charles F. Weller of the Playgrounds and Recreation association of America, in an address here.

Italian War Dirigible Good.

Rome, April 23.—A military dirigible covered the 181 miles between Roma and Verona at an average speed of about 33 miles an hour.

TELLS OF LIFE IN GAY HAVANA

Old Formalities Are Giving Place to American Ways, Says Wife of Mexican Minister to Cuba.

Washington, D. C.—Senora Adela P. de Cedoy, wife of the Mexican minister to Cuba, is spending the winter in Washington, she is well known and popular. In a recent interview she told much of interest to say about Havana, where she has her home. The interview in part was as follows:

"Havana is a beautiful city and we found American coming there in vast numbers, usually from Florida or from New Orleans after the carnival time. It is worthy of a visit, indeed, to spend an entire winter there if one has the leisure. Many seem to possess that comfortable combination of plenty of time and the requisite cash and it was delightful to run across friends from every part of the United States in the streets of Havana. My long residence in Washington has given me friends in every state sometimes, which adds so much to the pleasure and fitting out of life.

"Winter in Havana is a season of delight. We have established our home along the ocean front and truly it surpasses description. The mingling of deep blue water with deep blue sky, the white strand road along the sea and the magnificence of flower and foliage make a picture which one misses and regrets forever. I am sorry to say, like so many other Latin-American cities, in growing up the patio and ville type of the south of France and that of the American south and southwest is becoming more prevalent. I regret the patio ancestry, but the younger generation find more to admire in the story on story houses with all the modern conveniences. There are, however, still some splendid old mansions in Havana, where the patio exists in its primitive glory. This style is where the rooms of the home look out into an inner court filled with flowers, where a fountain plashes and the family delights to gather for intimate communion. Some of the old government buildings have this style.

"Social life in Havana is as admirable as its climate. One of the mingling of the odd ceremonial customs with the more democratic of our day has bred an air of easy social intercourse, which is most agreeable and not at all provincial. Many of the older residents continue the formal method of life which is part of Spanish civilization. Many others have adopted the easy ways of American life, and many of those are sections which keep one out of the sun. Such the brisk breezes which spring up with the departing day inspire energy to those who are not disposed to do it do not find the best debilitating or more oppressive, as a rule, than in the summer months of the summer. Washington can be very warm at all this season of the year, and it has not the advantage of a cool sea breeze from the west of Havana enjoys every evening and through the night."

CUTS SERMON; FIGHTS FIRE

Than Having Saved Neighboring Property Long Island Priest Commended for Heroism.

New York.—Glancing out of a window while preaching a sermon in St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Lithuanian Branch, L. I., Rev. William J. Dubigg saw flames leap from the roof of St. Sampson, opposite the church. The priest halted in the middle of a sentence.

"My friends, there is a fire in a neighboring dwelling. It is our duty to try and save it."

Not stopping to remove his vestments the priest dashed across the road and into a neighboring dwelling. It is also

THE ISLAND OF GRIMSEY AND JAN MAYEN

by THE DUCHESS OF BEDFORD

ARCTIC literature has always had a fascination for me, and it has long been my ambition to see something of the great frozen North; but, with the exception of a visit to Spitzbergen in 1902, when I went as far as Amsterdam Island and was stopped by ice, I have not been able to gratify my wish. In 1910 I visited Iceland. I find that when one has been to that country it is always assumed that one must have been Reykjavik and the Geysirs. But Reykjavik and the Geysirs had no attractions for me, as I was anxious to visit less well-known parts. The north and east coasts of Iceland and the island of Grimsey were the object of my voyage.

Grimsey lies thirty miles north of the north coast of Iceland, and is just within the Arctic circle. It has about seventy inhabitants who, with the exception of the pastor, live in turf huts. There is a very small wooden church, across the interior of which a large beam supports the walls some two or three feet above the pulpit. If the pastor stands upright the beam must come immediately in front of his face, and I regret that I was unable to attend a service to see how the difficulty was solved. The island is best known as the breeding-place of Europe of the little auk. I use told that the inhabitants are noted chess players, and are sent to play in tournaments far from their own home. As an island of chess players, Grimsey may continue to be far famed, but on the home of the little auk I fear it is doomed.

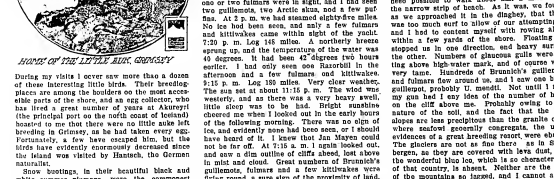
HUTS ON GRIMSEY

WHALES ANCHORED AT A WHALING STATION



HOMES OF THE LITTLE AUK, GRIMSEY

During my visits I never saw more than a dozen of these interesting little birds. Their breeding places are among the boulders on the most accessible parts of the shore, and an egg collector, who has lived a great number of years at Akureyri (the principal port on the north coast of Iceland) boasted to me that there were no little auks left breeding in Grimsey, as he had taken every egg. Fortunately, a few have escaped him, but the birds have evidently enormously decreased since the island was visited by Hantsch, the German naturalist.

Snow buntings, in their beautiful black and white summer plumage, were the commonest birds round the huts. Red-necked phalaropes, purple sandpipers, meadow pipits and ringed plovers were very abundant. Elder ducks nest all round the dwelling houses, and are so tame that the islanders stroke them when sitting on their eggs.

The commonest of the cliff breeders are the fulmars, puffins, kittiwakes, rossorbills, and Brunnich's guillemots, grey shoolcaps, whitenaps, white wagtails ravens and other birds are seen in smaller numbers. About three hundred and ten miles N.N.E. of Iceland and two hundred and forty miles from the coast of Greenland, lies the island of Jan Mayen. I had read about it in various books of Arctic travels, and in 1910 suggested half jokingly to my captain that I should like to go there. As the construction of my yacht is not adapted for encountering ice, he treated my suggestion even less seriously than I had hoped, and for the time being I had to agree. However, the thought had been within twenty-six hours of that coveted goal lay at the back of my mind, and I resolved the following year, though I did not mention it until I saw what the weather was like at Grimsey. I took the precaution of providing myself with the Austrian chart of Jan Mayen, which I knew my captain would consider unnecessary. Owing to bad weather, I had to wait some time at Akureyri (North Iceland) before I could go over to Grimsey, and during this time a naval lieutenant, who had been with the Sir Harold Mitchell expedition to Circolind, came to call upon me. Unfortunately, I was not on board, and he interviewed the captain instead. He told him that ice had been seen off Grimsey four days before our arrival, and, of course, scorned the idea of our going to Jan Mayen. The prospect did not seem hopeful, but as the ice was so near I told my captain that I should like to go and see it, and turn round as soon as we met with it. As we had perpetual daylight this suggestion found favor. We went over to Grimsey, where the inhabitants only confirmed what we had already heard, and expected we should meet with ice about forty miles north of the island. At 4 a.m. on July 29th we weighed anchor, and steamed away in pursuit of the ice, but I stipulated that our course should lie straight in the direction of Jan Mayen. The weather was bright and clear, and at 8 a. m. we sighted a distant iceberg between ourselves and the Greenland coast. At 11 a. m. there was no other sign of ice, though we had come over fifty miles. Birds were very scarce, generally only one or two fulmars were in sight, and I had seen two guillemots, two Arctic skua, and a few puffins. At 2 p. m. we had steamed eighty-five miles. No ice had been seen, and only a few fulmars and kittiwakes came within sight of the yacht. At 7.30 p. m. Log 145 miles. A northerly breeze sprung up, and the temperature of the water was 40 degrees. It had been 42 degrees two hours earlier. I had only seen one Razorbill in the afternoon and a few fulmars and kittiwakes. At 9.15 p. m. Log 180 miles. Very clear weather. The sun set at about 11:15 p. m. The wind was westerly, and as there was a very heavy swell, little sleep was to be had. Bright sunshine cheered me when I looked out in the early hours of the following morning. There was no sign of ice, and evidently none had been seen, or I should have heard of it. I knew that Jan Mayen could not be far off. At 9:15 a. m. I again looked out, and saw a dim outline of cliff ahead, lost above in mist and cloud. Great numbers of Brunnich's guillemots, fulmars and a few kittiwakes were flying round, a sure sign of the proximity of land. The thermometer on deck registered 46 degrees Fahrenheit and the log 280 miles. Gradually the beautiful snow-covered volcano, Beerenberg, appeared above the cloud. All below was shrouded in mist, except just above sea level, where one could trace the dim outline of land. As we approached, a long, low-lying peninsula stretched out to the southwest, and on the mist cleared off we could see up the high cliffs in front of us. we could see that the tops were covered with vegetation, and more far only in patches in the deep ravines. The whole island is apparently studded with ores, and the tops of the cliffs form huge rugged basins. The cliffs are a curious rusty red color (suggestive of iron) mixed with the black lava. I am not sure whether it was only the sight of them which frightened my captain, but, at all events, he believed his compasses to be affected, and was not eolying himself as much as I was. Along the sheet was a line of broken ice. The temperature of the water at 9 a. m. was 41 degrees and at 10:50 a. m. 36 degrees. As we steamed round from South Cape to South East Cape we saw that Beerenberg, which at first appeared part of the cliffs in front of us, was separated from them by a low stretch of land, one mile and a half wide, and apparently little above sea level. Had there been no ice, it looked an easy place to land, but under the circumstances it was impossible. By the time we reached this isthmus the whole island was clear, except for a few fleecy clouds over the southern end. Leaving the isthmus behind us, we passed the remarkable crater, Egg Island, ones, I believe, an island, but now apparently connected with the shore. One side of it has been worn away by the sea. It is 600 feet high, and from its inner wall steam is said to be always rising.

It was the warmest day we had had since leaving England, and I spent the whole morning on the bridge without a coat. Shortly after passing Egg Bluff, we steamed under Beerenberg, which, on this glorious, cloudless day, was dazzling in its snowy whiteness. At noon the thermometer registered 49 degrees, the temperature of the water 37 degrees, and there was a fresh, northwesterly breeze. We continued our voyage round the east coast, and here the sea was so calm that we went full speed ahead, as it seemed probable that I could land. We stopped in sixteen fathoms of water, nearly a mile from the shore, and had it been good holding ground it might have been possible to anchor, but as we were right in front of the Wills glacier, which comes down to the sea, it was doubtful what the bottom would be like, and in any case it would have been unwise for us to do so.

The cliffs on this coast are very precipitous, and, could I have landed, it would only have been possible to walk about half a mile along the narrow strip of beach. As it was, we found, as we approached it in the dinghey, that there was too much surf to allow of our attempting it, and I had to content myself with rowing along within a few yards of the shore. Floating ice stopped us in one direction, and heavy surf in the other. Numbers of glaucous gulls were sitting above high-water mark, and of courses were very tame. Hundreds of Brunnich's guillemots and fulmars flew around us, and I saw one black guillemot, probably U. mandtii. Not until I fired my gun had I any idea of the number of birds on the cliff above me. Probably owing to the nature of the soil, and the fact that the cliff slopes are less precipitous than the granite cliffs where seafowl generally congregate, the usual colonies of a great breeding resort, were absent. The glaciers are not as fine there as in Spitzbergen, as they are covered with dirt, and look like the wonderful blue ice, which is so characteristic of that country, is absent. Neither are the peaks of the mountains so jagged, and I cannot agree with Scoresby that it ramkinds one in any way of Spitzbergen. As it was impossible to go down the west coast, we returned by the southeast coast, leaving Wille Allerey about 1:40 p. m. As we steamed round the South East cape, we could see the whole of this weird and wonderful island from end to end in cloudless sunshine. But for the surf, no one could have asked for a finer day for landing, and probably without the wind we should have had fog. Already it was creeping up to eastward of us, and at 5 p. m. when we were well away from the island, we ran into it. After the fog we had an easterly gale and dangerous sea, which obliged us to choose our course for a time. But I had seen Jan Mayen, and did not greatly care what happened!

Mrs. Martha Holland, a Grandma, Enjoys the Game.

Declares It is More Fun Than Sitting Down With Cap and Glasses to Do Knitting—Led by Doctor's Slur.

New York.—"Wear a cap and glasses and settle down to knitting just because I happened to be sixty-five and a grandmother? I don't see why. Besides, baseball is more fun."

Bright-eyed, rosy-cheeked and full of life, little Mrs. Martha Holland drew off a heavy pair of gloves and stuffed them into the pocket of a gray sweater, which she then pulled off and tossed over the back of a chair. As she pulled a rocking chair up to the ice table a rooter struck something that fell to the floor. It was a baseball bat. In the work basket on the table was a baseball. In fact, everything about Mrs. Holland's little home at 344 Park avenue, in Westchester, suggested a very active and sport-loving young boy rather than a grandmother, even the World.

"Some people," she said, "make fun of me for playing baseball with the children. Some say I am setting a bad example for the young women, and that if all grandmothers acted as I do we would have a race of 'tomboys' for daughters. Others seem to see sense in it.

"Why did I begin to play baseball? Because a man made me ashamed. Five years ago, when I was only sixty, I was positive that I was becoming a real old lady. I used to sit and crochet and have a contented, I was a real tame sort of grandmother. Also I had my little ailments. If I couldn't confess my temptation it would be a headache or something else. Then I began to think I was getting feeble and couldn't go out of doors.

"One day a man friend was visiting me. He looked at me, ebook his head and said, most snappishly:

"'I tell you, Martha Holland, what's the matter with you. You are lazy—lazy; that's all. When most women get to be your age they seem to think it smart to seem ill and make sweet, one miserable. What you women need is exercise, and plenty of it. If I had my way I would put you to playing baseball with the younger ones. That's the medicine I'd give you, and it would be all you'd need.'

"It did make me angry to be called lazy, but he didn't care.

"One day when at my daughter's I saw my grandsons playing in a vacent lot with some friends. I didn't say a word, but just went over to the ball game and asked them to show me how. What happened? Why, the entire fact ily thought I had lost my mind. But ever since then I've been playing baseball with my grandsons and their little friends.

"I believe that if women, especially those who begin to have fancies about their sick when they really are not, would get out and play baseball with th children they would live longer and be far happier.

"Five years ago, sitting in the house and fretting about nothing, I grew thin and wrinkled. Of course, I was only a middle-aged lady then (most of 6ve years ago; they are et least happy wrinkles; those were from age just enough to make me languid twelve months in the year, and now I have muscles that I never knew of before. See this?

"That is what catching and pitching and batting does for one. Yes, I do all three. You would have laughed when I began, for I couldn't hit a ball. It took time for me to learn. How the boys used to shout when grandma first threw e ball!

"Another thing—when women get to my age they need the company of younger folk."

WILSON'S ONLY 'SON'

Story of the Fourth Member of President's Family.

Dr. George Howe, Child of Executive's Sister, Was Raised and Educated by Natives Chief—Discovered at the Inauguration.

Washington.—A tall, distinguished looking young man, closely resembling the pictures of Woodrow Wilson in early youth, was a prominent member of the president's personal party during the inauguration in Washington. He was noticed by many, but besides the immediate family few knew that this was young Dr. George Howe, younger son of Mrs. Annie Wilson Howe, the president's only sister, who is now a member of the White House family, and, who holds in the president's heart the place of an only son, which he was brought to Woodrow Wilson's own home as an adopted son.

George Howe graduated from Princeton a first honor man and was then sent by his uncle to the University of Berlin in Germany, where he took his Ph. D. with highest honors. Before going to Germany he took a year's course of post-graduate work at Oxford, and immediately after his return from Europe he was called to take charge of the department of Greek at the University of North Carolina.

His earliest youth was spent in Columbia, S. C., and from his old home he chose in boyhood his future bride, Miss Mother, Jessy Smyth of Columbia, S. C., and George Howe's mother, Mrs. Annie Wilson, were friends from childhood. The old families of Howe, Wilson

Virginia Peyton Howe.

South Carolina—where Woodrow Wilson's famous uncle, Dr. James Woodrow, was one time president—all the families were delighted. Margaret Pilun grew up to be the beauty of South Carolina and a famous belle throughout the south, and Woodrow Howe, George's adopted father, gave the engagement his heartiest blessing

THIS CAT SWIMS AND BOXES

Felina Traveler Also Swings by the Tail Without a Murmur of Protest.

New York.—Teddy came to New York city recently with all his feline fancies, and soon had nearly every one in the lobby of the Albert stopping notice that he was no ordinary cat. Teddy can box, turn somersaults, hang by his tail and eat prunes. He likes to perform, and after a busy afternoon showing around among the same along his cunning tricks, he curled up on the hotel desk and slept as peacefully as a tramp in a box car.

Teddy is traveling with his master, L. C. Breed, who is connected with a Chicago trade publication. Teddy has been Mr. Breed's constant companion for almost four years. He adopted in the summer of 1909. Mr. Breed was in the Park hotel, in St. Louis, and a fellow lodger named Bill brought the kitten. Teddy was a tiny ball of gray fur then, and soon found him unusually playful and intelligent. A mutual friendship grew up between the two, and Mr. Breed refused the master by paying the hotel bill and asking for the kitten.

As soon as Teddy became used to two or three square meals a day, he was put under the scrutiny of several cat fanciers, who discovered that Teddy had all the points necessary to make him a show possibility. He has been Mr. Breed's constant companion for almost four years.

Edna Louise Adams, Convicted in Los Angeles, Will Be Under Rule of Governess.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Edna Louise Adams, said to be from Chicago, who was arrested in this city several months ago on a charge of passing worthless checks and entered a plea of guilty, will explain her fault in a luxuriously appointed bungalow near Los Angeles with a governess, an autonobile and ample funds at her command. Miss Adams began her probation the other day.

In granting probation to the young woman Superior Judge McCormick stipulated that she must abide by the judgment of her governess in her recreative indulgences; refrain from cigarettes and intoxicating liquors, and that she must act in financial and business transactions in accordance with the opinion of her governess.

Miss Adams, according to the terms of her probation, must remain under the domination of the governess for two years.

BUT AT CHURCH

But at the inauguration their sweetness to the White House family and their immediate place could be kept private no longer; the favorite nephew of the president of the United States cannot remain an obscure personage. During the great inaugural parade Mr. and Mrs Howe and their little daughter, Virgina, stood with the president's immediate family in the presidential box, and newspaper men in the rear, noticing the striking resemblance between nephew and uncle, did not rest until they had ferreted out who the young man was.

STUDENT, AGED 57, IS DEAD

Falls for Hundredth Time to Become Swiss M. D. at University of Berne.

Berne.—The oldest university student in Switzerland, Gottlieb Laederach, died here at the age of fifty-seven, having studied at the University of Berne for 37 years without having taken his medical degree.

Laederach entered the university here as an seventy years old. He studied assiduously, but, owing to a singular nervous temperament, he could never pass an examination. Under the written and oral tests he became so embarrassed that he always failed.

Laederach, however, had an independent income and tenacity. He determined to pass the examinations if it took a lifetime. Many of his student friends became professors of medicine at Berne and elsewhere, attended their lectures, although he knew all they knew.

Years went by, with the student still striving for his degree. Recently he went into the examination room for the hundredth time. He was confronted with a series of answers to the questions of the examiners when he fell forward on his desk, dead from heart failure.

BUILDING FOR THE FUTURE.

With the destruction of the high school building yesterday morning the people of Independent District No. 15 are confronted by the necessity of providing without unnecessary delay for the construction of a modern school building. However, haste in providing for the present needs of the situation should not be the first consideration. Rather than being importuned to "hurry" the members of the board of education should be encouraged in their desire that the new building shall be made right, not hesitating to delay the occupancy of the new building, if necessary, until after the usual date for opening of school in the fall. Though it is no time for procrastination, it is important work and there should be no hesitancy in sacrificing more time, if necessary to get the desired results.

With an undertaking of this kind it is necessary that the work shall be rightly planned and executed with exactness, and efficiency and the necessity of providing for the future needs of the district should be the controlling considerations.

In this connection the Gazette has thought of urging the necessity of providing more suitable grounds, and upon inquiry it was found that many people had been thinking of the matter recently. On that point, the first consideration in planning the new building, there will probably be no difference of opinion. There should be none.

The inadequacy of the present site, one half of a city block, should be apparent to everybody. The grounds for the new building should contain at least a full block, more would be better. The Gazette expresses the hope that any efforts that would be made will be public spirited enough to cause those interested others to set at their reasonable value.

Can the cans.

Friday, May 2, is arbor day and bird day. Plant a tree.

It is taking the new weather man a few days to get the spring scrapers to working right.

It is said that the Washington authorities will have a brass band. That's something nearer like playing the game right.

In some localities they do not consider that arbor and bird day is jointly signalized with the coming of a tree unless a few sparrows are also planted.

An exchange—probably edited by a democratic scribe—is enthusiastic democrat—expects every congressman to do duty. Isn't that expecting too much.

There was no "law's delay" in the publication of the new Red Lake laws. The legislature adjourned last Wednesday and the complete session laws are published in today's paper.

The picturesque language of the lake hall fan has won a permanent place, but the man who can talk automobile intelligently is an accomplished linguist.

The Dunn good roads bill is the longest bill passed by the legislature recently adjourned. But it cannot be counted barren verbiage for it has "paved the way" for the construction of some long roads and some good roads.

If the "peerless one" should bring about universal peace and Jamestown Illion Lewis should get a shave, as a modern drama demands, the space writers would have little to comment about except base ball.

Mankato Free Press: The irrepressible chap who knows all about base ball and is set bashful in the telling of it, will be a conspicuous and obnoxious occupant of the bleachers from now on until the end of the season. The adoption of measures to suppress the kind would be welcomed by the sane and sensible fan.

It is enaucted that the government's supply of old cannon for decorating parks and public grounds has been exhausted. Red Lake county was fortunate to get its supply of artillery and prevent our overambitious neighbors from running away with one very fine court house.

Read this from the editorial column of the Minneapolis Journal:

"Wisconsin is deeply stirred because the Mayor of Manitowoc, Joseph Hasher, has wiped out a floating indebtedness of fifteen thousand dollars, reduced the city's bonded debt twenty-six thousand dollars, and accumulated fifty-two thousand dollars in the Treasury. This has been done during five years in which streets have been paved and a concrete bridge built across the Mesomince river. In all this time the tax rate has not been raised and the mayor predicts a lower tax rate next year. Can such things be?"

And the Journal has just put the ban on fake advertising and highly colored news stories.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES.

The senior girls gave a six o'clock dinner to the school board Saturday.

News comes from Gleason saying that Mr. Koos, our former superintendent, is well liked there.

Mr. Cook has had quite a few visitors in his office this year. All of them say that he is pleasant company.

Mr. Carpenter will now paddle his own canoe, a fine Hills canvas craft, that is nearly finished.

We just learned that the "Freshies" stay after school to practice marching.

Another month has gone by. Now for the next one. We have about 275 in the grades and high. The next one still shands there, with a brokn knife for a pedal. Oh, well, I don't play it.

(This was written before the fire.)

We have slagging now three times a week. Hard work for some to get up early in the morning.

This week seems to be a week of visitors. Nothing the matter with it though. except we are all anxious for vacation.

The Sophomores are getting an introduction to Modern History. Any hope for a change, is what they think.

"Yes, our new wagon's a Studebaker —the only kind we KNOW"

"The Studebaker idea has been in our family for sixty years. We have never thought of buying any other kind of a wagon."

It's true, we're continually being offered other wagons costing a little less, with lots of promises as to what they will do. But we favor in our family what a Studebaker will do. A few dollars difference in price doesn't mean much. It's the service a wagon gives that we consider most."

"Long service for a fair price means more every time than short service for a few dollars less."

"That's why we stick to Studebaker—and 'Stick to Studebaker' is a pretty good motto for a man who uses wagons."

Studebaker wagons are built of good stuff. They're made right by people who've had years and years of experience in making them right—people who are trusted the world over.

"Studebaker wagons last, because they're made to last."

Look out for the dealer who tells you his wagon is just as good as a Studebaker. That's my advice after a good deal of experience — and the experience of all of my people. You get a Studebaker and you've got a safe investment.

At the age of 12 she moved to London, Hughes, whom she married. Two years later she came with her husband to Arnprior, Ontario, Canada where seven children were born to their union. In 1888 she came to North Dakota, residing there ten years. Since that time she has been her home. She leaves to mourn her loss a husband, James Hughes of Calgary, Alberta; five daughters, Mrs. A. L. McAndrew of this place, Mrs. S. A. Chamberlain of Duluth, Mrs. L. M. Mitchell of Lansford, N. D., Mrs. J. B. Monaghon of Calgary, Alberta, Miss Tena Hughes of Duluth, two sons, George H. Hughes of International Falls, and Howard Hughes of San Francisco; seven grand children and three great grand children, besides a host of friends

The friends of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Krueger gave them a farewell surprise Monday evening at the Odd-fellow building. About seventy-five guests were present. The evening was spent in social chat and a delicious lunch was served, the guests being seated at tables around the room with a special table in the center for the honor guests. The hall was prettily decorated for the occasion. As a remembrance and token of respect from their St. Hilaire friends, they were presented with some beautiful hand painted china. Rev. Palmer made the presentation speech to which Mr. Krueger responded with a few, well chosen remarks in which he voiced their regret at leaving their many warm friends. Since coming here about three years ago, they have taken active part in the M. E. church, Mrs. Krueger having been president of the Ladies Aid for the past year and a half, and in that capacity proved herself always a conscientious and efficient worker. Mr. and Mrs. Krueger leave for New Rockford, N. D., about May 1, and while their departure is regretted their friends join in wishing them success in their new home.—Spectator.

SYNOPSIS.

Bill Cannon, the bonanza king, and his daughter, Rose, who had passed up Mrs. Cornelius Ryan's visit at San Francisco, arrive at Rosanna Ranch. Mrs. Ryan's invitation, Rose says, is only a formality, for she will not be refused. The determined old lady refuses to take no for an answer. Rose's father, who had been trapped into a marriage with Hendrica Iverson, a stenographer, several years his senior, she squandering his money, they being frequent guests, and finally deserting her, had been a widower for over seventeen years. Hendrica Ryan is received from storm in uncomfortable condition and refuses to leave. Lucien Antelope, a half-breed servant, brings Dominick back to life. Two weeks later Dominick receives a letter purporting to be from Rose, but which is in reality from Hendrica Ryan, who has written it at the dictation of Dominick, who has fallen in love with Rose. Dominick, at last in receipt of a letter from Rose, is overjoyed, but when he reads the letter carefully he finds it is not from her.

CHAPTER VIII.—(Continued.)

He suddenly looked away from her and, turning to the chimney-piece, twisted one hand upon it and gazed down at the logs. A charred and preserved end he pushed it with his slippered foot, his head bent close, the lips set and brown wrinkled, looking like the face of a sullen boy who has been unjustly punished. An icy, broadside chill of depression made Rose's heart sink down into bottomless depths. She faltered in faint tones.

"Well, you'll be there soon now."

"I don't know," he answered without moving. "I don't know whether I shall."

"You don't know whether you'll go home soon? The roads are open; the postmen has come in."

"I don't know whether I'll go home," he repeated.

The snapping of the fire sounded loud upon the silence that followed. The thrill of strong emotions rising forward expression held them in a breathless, immovable quietude.

"Don't you want to go home?" said the young girl. Her voice was low and she cleared her throat. In this interchange of commonplace sentences her heart had begun to beat so violently that it interfered with the ease of her speech.

Dominick leaned forward and dropped the crumpled letter into the fire.

"No, I don't want to. I hate to."

To this she did not reply at all, and after a moment he continued: "My home is unbearable to me. It isn't a home. It's a place where I eat and sleep, and I'd prefer doing that any where else, in any dirty boarding-house or fourth-rate hotel—I'd rath—I'd—"

He stopped abruptly and pushed the log farther in. Then he was caught up the chimney in a swirl of black-sooted crepe.

"But your wife!" said Rose.

This time her voice was hoarse but she did not know it. She had lost the consciousness of herself. It was a profound moment, the deepest she had so far known, and all the forces of her being were concentrated upon it. The young man answered with deliberation, still not moving.

"I don't want to see my wife. We are—we are—unconcealed. There is nothing but unhappiness between us."

"Don't you love her?" said the girl.

"No. I never did," he answered.

For a moment neither dared speak. They did not look at each other or stir. They hardly seemed to breathe. A movement, a touch, would have rent the last thin veneer of reserve that covered what were no longer unashamed feelings. Dominick knew it and the girl did not. She was seized by what to her was a sudden, inspired cable fear, and the tortured, suffocating beating of her heart made her feel dizzy. She wondered wildly how to fly, to escape from the room, and him, and herself. She turned to go and was arrested by Cora's voice in the hall.

"Say, you folks, are you in there?"

Cora's visage followed her voice. She thrust it round the door-post, beamingly smiling under a recently supplied coat of powder.

"Do you want to tackle a game of cuchre? Mr. Willoughby and I'll lay you out cold unless that British memory of his has gone back on him and he's forgot all I taught him last time."

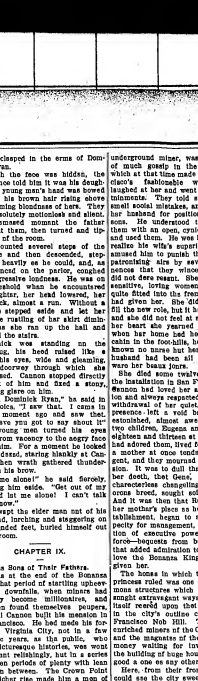
They were too bewildered to make any response but gathered up her coat and dropped it again, looking stupidly from it to the intruder. Cora turned back to the passage, calling:

"Here they are, Mr. Willoughby, all ready and waiting for us. Now we'll show them how to play euchre."

Before Willoughby appeared, responsive to this cheerful bell, Cora had pulled the chairs round the table and brought out the cards. A few moments later, they were seated and the game had begun. Cora and her partner were soon jubilant. Not only did they hold the cards, but their strategies played so badly that the tale of many old scores was wiped off.

The next day the first movements of departure began. Early in the afternoon Buford and Judge Willoughby started for Rocky Bar in Perley's sleigh. The road had been broken by the mail-carrier, but was still so deeply drifted that the drive was rendered a tedious undertaking not with out danger. Perley had ordered two horses were harnessed in tandem, and Perley himself, a mere pillar of wrappings, drove Queen, perched on a stout box in front of the two passengers. There were cries of farewell from the porch and wavings on the windows as the sleigh started and sped away to the diminishing jingle of bells. A sadness fell on those who watched it. The little toys of isolation was over.

On the following day Bill Cannon and his daughter were to leave. A telegram had been sent to Rocky Bar for a sleigh and horses of the proper excellence to be the equipage of a



LAVIN

"Well, Dominick Ryan," He Said, in a Low Voice, "I Saw That."

Rosanna Princess. Rose had spent the morning packing the trunks, and letts in the afternoon began a downstairs search for possessions left in the parlor.

The dusk was gathering as she entered the room, the corners of which were already full of darkness, the fire playing on them with a warm, varying light. Waves of radiance quivered and ran up the ceiling, bars and discs touching the glass on a picture glass or china ornament. The crude splendors of the room was hidden in this unsteady, transforming combination of shadow and glow. It seemed a rich, romantic spot, flushed with fire that pulsed on a color-edge of mysterious obscurity, a center of familiar, intimate life, sound which coldness and the dark pressed.

She thought the room was unoccupied and advanced toward the table, then started before the uprising of Dominick's tall figure from a chair in the shadowed corner. It was the first time they had seen each other alone since their encounter outside the cave. Rose was startled and agitated, and her breath quickened without her knowledge. Her voice, however, was natural, almost easy to casual observation.

"I thought there was no one here. I'm only looking for some of my things in a corner. I came to gather up my books and things."

He moved into the light, looking somberly at her.

"It's true that you're going to-morrow?" he said almost gruffly.

"Oh, yes, we're always going. Everything is always arranged. Horses and a sleigh are expected any moment now from Rocky Bar. They've been all night and take as down in the afternoon. I think papa will start if we had to stay twenty-four hours longer."

"I'll follow in a day or two," he said. "probably go down on Tuesday, to-day or Wednesday."

She began gathering up the books, reading the titles, and putting aside those that were hers.

"I'm so sorry it's over," she said in a preoccupied voice without any particular regret in it. "This Mill on the Floss is Mrs. Perley's, I think."

"I'm sorry, too," he commented, very low.

She made no reply, selected another book, and as she held it up looking at the back, said:

"But it's not like a regular good-by. It's not as if you were going in one direction and we in another. We'll see you in San Francisco, of course."

"I don't think so," he answered.

She laid the book on the table and turned her face toward him. He stood looking into the fire, not seeing the face, but conscious of it, of its expression of its every line.

"Do you mean that we're not going to see you down here at all?"

"Yes, that's just about what I mean," he replied.

"Mr. Ryan!" It was hardly more than a breath of protest, but it was as stirring to the man to the white per of love.

He made no comment on it, and she said, with a little more of insistence and coldness:

"But why?"

"I can't put out," he answered, and turned toward her.

His shoulders were squared and he held his head at a set mode when he prepares himself for a blow. His eyes looking straight into hers, enveloped her in a silence soft and burning, not a savage, passionate, but an exacting, pleading glance, caressing and ardent, pleading end masterful, of supplication.

The hooks that she was holding fell from her hand and she stooped to pick other while the clock ticked.

"It's not that you have to come," he said huskily, "never to come."

"Very well," she faltered.

He rose a little nearer to her and said:

"You know what I mean."

She turned away, very pale, her lips trembling.

"And you'd like me to come if I could—if I were free?"

She bowed to her and looked down to see her face, his own hard, the bones of the jaw showing through the thin cheeks.

"If I were free to come," he repeated, huskily, "never to come."

"Very well," she faltered.

He rose a little nearer to her end

CHILDREN PROTEST

PARADE AND CRY OUT AGAINST S. L. HEETER, RECENTLY UNDER CHARGES.

ST. PAUL SCHOOLS, FORMERLY

Case Linked With Board of Education Fight, It Is Said—Body Burned in Effigy.

Pittsburg, Pa., April 23.—When S. L. Heeter superintendent of the public schools of Pittsburg, acquitted by a jury in criminal court last Friday of two serious charges preferred by a maid employed in his home, returned to his duties, children at a number of the public schools throughout the city refused to enter the school buildings. In some instances the parents of the children, it is announced, took them home.

Parades Are Held.

Later a number of parades of children were held. In the business district there were 200 children in the parade. Banners inscribed "Kick Heeter Out" were carried.

Supt. Heeter formerly was head of the schools of St. Paul, Minn. After charges were made against him to the coroner by Ethel Ivy Fisher, a domestic, while ill in a local hospital, Heeter was indicted and was, at his own request, granted a leave of absence by the board of education until such time as "he should prove his innocence."

His acquittal last Friday was followed by his return as head of the public school system Monday.

Girl Is Hinted At.

The extent of the alleged strike or boycott-action of school children against the presence of Heeter as superintendent of schools, cannot be accurately stated. It is known that several hundred pupils at least, left the school buildings.

The case of Superintendent Heeter has been given wide publicity here by several newspapers. There is coupled with the case, incidentally, a fight against the present board of education because it was appointed and not elected.

Developments in the matter are expected as soon as the board of education holds a meeting.

Riot Call Turned In.

Several hundred high boys, hooting dish pans, blowing whistles and shouting "Down with Heeter," made a demonstration before the home of Superintendent of Schools Heeter. The children came to the Heeter home, located in a fashionable residential section, in a body. A patrol wagon and the poorer districts of Penn avenue and Butler street and climbed over Black Horse hill, a lonely spot, to reach their destination.

Neighbors of Mr. Heeter turned in a riot call. At the sight of the police the children scattered up over the hill. Eight small boys were captured. Superintendent Heeter watched the demonstration from the front porch of his home. He requested the police to release the eight boys, saying "these boys are not back of this."

The police complied.

Four Men Sought.

According to information to the possession of Captain Allerdice, of the police department, which was received after the demonstration, it is alleged that four men organized the demonstration, led the children to the top of Black Horse hill, gave them directions to the Heeter home and then started them down the hill.

An effort is being made to locate the four men.

Later in the night a figure of straw labelled "Superintendent Heeter" was burned in another part of the city.

Brush Fires Rage.

Brailord.—The biggest brush fire which Crew Wing county has seen in sixteen years raged to the territory between Barrows and Brailord. Whipped by the wind the flames rushed to the city limits of Brailord on the south side. Heavy damage was done to hay, standing timber, cord wood and logs. The Virginia Ore Mining company lost a lot of valuable mining timber on the Barrows line. Hay owned by J. M. Hayes and other landowners went up in smoke. Standing young timber, whose value cannot be estimated, was specially reserved to ashes. Farmers banded together and fought the flames. Forest Ranger J. P. Saunders of Brainerd was on the scene and gave what assistance was in his power.

Steamers Leave Duluth.

Duluth.—Already three steamers have left the Atlantic-Superior harbor since the departure of the steamers Wolf and Dunham which opened navigation here. They were the Ontario, carrying 290,000 bushel of wheat; Jesse F. Ropp, 304,000 bushels of wheat, and the W. P. Snyder, Jr., carrying 115,000 bushels of wheat.

Road Petition Considered.

Grand Rapids.—A special meeting of the commissioners of Itasca county was held this week to consider the petition for state rural highway No. 10, known as the Duluth & St. Vincent trunk line, running from the twin cities to the Canadian boundary. State Highway Engineer R. M. Cooley was present and approved the steps already taken by the commissioners. L. W. Hunting, A. H. Randall and John H. Carlson were appointed viewers to appraise the benefits and damages.

Swims Across Icy Red River.

Crookston.—On a wager with Secretary Sweeney of the Commercial club, Manager C. C. Sloan of the Crookston Gas company swam the icy Red Lake river, which at present is at high stage, 250 yards across. Sloss started from the city park slide and was cheered more than a block down stream before gaining the opposite shore. He was in the water sixteen minutes, having trouble getting over a slippery log boom. The current is more than a mill race. Sloan suffered no ill effects from his feat.

CAR HITS CYCLE; KILLS TWO

Motorman, Who Figured in Young Dusek's Death, in Another Accident.

St. Paul.—Two young men were killed when the motorcycle, on which they were riding, was struck at West Seventh street and Fairview avenue by a Snelling-Minnehaha car. The motorman was Ambros Ln Mettry, whose car killed the young son of Frank Dusek last summer. He and the conductor, Arthur C. Meyer were locked up at Central police station after last night's accident. They will be charged with manslaughter, according to Dr. D. C. Jones, coroner.

The dead men are Ernest H. Mellecke, 1769 Sheridan street, and Edwin Ruhben, 1813 Sheridan. Mellecke was dead when the city hospital was reached, and Ruhben expired within a few minutes. The skulls of both were fractured.

The accident occurred where the West Seventh street cars turn on Fairview avenue to cross the new bridge across the river. The two boys on a motorcycle had come from West Seventh street and were going to Seventh. They attempted to cross the street ahead of the car, which was approaching rapidly.

TAKES CHARGE OF YOUNG MEN

Minneapolis Y. M. C. A. Establishes Department for Protecting Strange Youths.

Minneapolis.—Realizing that one of the most important things to a young man coming to the city for the first time is to get a home to the proper environment, J. S. Nebergall, assistant secretary of the Y. M. C. A., has investigated more than a hundred private rooming houses in various parts of Minneapolis, with a view to putting young men in homes that will be both safe and congenial.

"Perhaps the greatest danger in a young man alone in a strange city comes through the Canadian boarder," said Mr. Nebergall as he finished talking to a young man that had just placed in a pleasant home. "A young man with no friends and an unfamiliar environment is a prey for bright lights of the city streets and the boarding opportunities which afford him privacy."

Arrested for Land Frauds.

Duluth. — Deputy United States Marshal George A. Wilson has taken David Bartlett to Milwaukee to stand trial for using the mails in an attempt to defraud. Bartlett was arrested on March 27 by a postoffice inspector, on complaint of a homestead settler in Miles, Wis. Bartlett at a hearing here practically admitted the charge and waived examination. It is claimed that Bartlett who lived to Superior under the name of Hartwell represented that he had some rich mineral lands in Michigan for sale cheap.

Barnesville.—Building prospects to the Barnesville public are bright. Said Carr, president of the Barnesville National bank, and Carr, Ericksen and the Red River Loan company, will erect a brick building on Front street. The building will be 125 feet wide and the entire length of the lots, and will have a basement. Roger Ashwood has returned from Nebraska, where he disposed of two elevators and nearly 100,000 potatoes at 85 cents a bushel.

Killed by His Team.

New Ulm.—Chris Pilzer, Sr., for many years engineer at the Dacotah cement of New Ulm, died early Monday as the result of injuries sustained late Saturday afternoon. He was hauling a load of fertilizer to his farm north of the city when a fall threw him to the ground and back of the horses. The animals began to kick, fracturing his skull, both arms and his right leg. He was 72 years old and leaves a wife and seven children.

Nominations at Red Wing.

Red Wing.—At the republican city convention J. J. Ferris was nominated for mayor and the following aldermen made were: Aldermen at large, Frank Ward and Albert Hall; First ward, Eugene, John G. Gilbertson, Otto Remmele; Second ward, Christian Lund; school board, F. H. Erickson and C. E. Sheldon; city treasurer, George F. Gross.

Two Brothers Dying.

Hibbing.—Steve Dukvoratsolich and his younger brother, Radic, miners, are fatally shot Monday night. Leads in Nobravich, according to the police, shot the brothers in a saloon row. This is a game of poker. The wounded miners were taken to a hospital, where they are said to be dying. Nobravich was arrested.

Forty Women Quit Duluth.

Duluth.—Forty forty women of Duluth's oldtime segregated district have left the city because of the order of the commissione government, prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors.

Girl Drowned in Cistern.

Waseca.—The body of Evelyn Eisenmer, 4 years old, was found in a cistern at the rear of her father's home Tuesday morning. The cistern was covered by loose boards, weighted down by a fifty pound stone and a bucket filled. The coroner immediately began an investigation. He believes that the little boys who were playing with the stone and bucket at the time drew the child, frightened, put the cover on. The children had been warned not to look into the opening.

Child Saved From Under Ice.

Duluth.—Winnifred Mandelay, the two-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. G. Mandelay of this city, narrowly escaped drowning when she fell into a hole in the ice on a creek that runs near her home. She went under the ice and could be seen. An alarm was raised and neighbors followed the child four blocks, when several men broke a hole through the ice and as the child swept past the hole drew her out. Strangely the baby was not unconscious and sat up a long crying.

BIBLE READING TEST

ACTION BY CATHOLICS OF MANKATO AGAINST SCHOOL BOARD AND TEACHERS.

PRIEST IS THE PLAINTIFF

Says That It Is Unfair to His Church to Teach Customs and Usages of "Orthodox Evangelical Churches."

Mankato.—Whether the reading of portions of the Bible, singing hymns and offering prayer to the high schools each Monday morning constitutes a violation of the Minnesota statutes that states of Minnesota is to be determined in an action brought in the district court of this county to restrain the school board and the high school teachers from continuing to hold these religious exercises.

The plaintiff in the action is Rev. Robert Hughes, pastor of St. John's Catholic church, and the defendants are the school district, the board of education and City Superintendent F. J. Sperry. A permanent injunction is asked for, and in the meantime Judge Pfau has granted a temporary restraining order, returnable Tuesday, April 25. The case will be tried on its merits at the June term of the district court.

It is likely that the board of education will put in a defense, and thus make a test case, as most of the board members are in favor of continuing the exercises, which they do not look upon as being offensive to any particular sect or religion. A special meeting to consider the matter has been held this afternoon.

Rev. Hughes, to his complaint, alleges that he has for more than twenty years been a resident of the Catholic church; that many of his present parishioners are attending the public schools of the city; that certain portions of the Bible, the teachers select, the portions to read, and unfortunately using in such reading the Bible known as the King James version, and also recite religious and sectarian prayers in the prayer to Deity, according to the customs and usages of the so-called "Orthodox Evangelical churches" of the country, and in accordance with the belief and practice of said churches, the pupils joining in the singing of such songs or hymns and in the offering of prayer, at the request of the said teachers.

The plaintiff further shows that he has a large number of the children attending the schools of the city of his church and conscientiously believe its doctrines, faith and forms of worship; and that they believe the version of the scripture referred to to the complaint to be incorrect as a translation and to be complete by reason of the omission of a part of the books held by the said church to be integral portions of the inspired canon, and the form of worship to be incorrect.

That it is not only not beneficial to the children of the public schools who are members of the said church, but likely to lead to the adoption of dangerous errors, irreligious faith, practice and worship, and that by reason thereof the practice of reading the St. James version of the Bible openly and orally in the said school inspired and true by the protestant religious sects, is regarded by the members of the Roman Catholic church as contrary to the right of religious liberty, as wholly contrary to and in violation of the law, and to violate section 16, article 1, and section 3, article III of the constitution of the state of Minnesota.

Farmers Oppose Project.

Rochester.—The project to construct a state highway from Stewartville to Rochester, which has been approved by the state highway commission and the date of public hearing set for May 1 has aroused opposition among farmers in the section through which the road traverses, although not to all cases prohibitive terms as to the construction known as the Farmers' association has been formed, the object of which is to defeat the proposition. Circulars have been sent all over Olmsted county, attacking the building of the road, maintaining that the farmers will pay 75 per cent of the cost, that the road is for the benefit of the rich of Rochester owning automobiles.

Cayuna Strike at an End.

Brainerd.—The strike of the underground miners on the Cayuna range is ended. Work was resumed at the Kennedy, the two Armour properties and the Thompson mine with approximately 1,000 men employed. An agreement between the strikers and the mine owners, the men offered to return to work at the old scale and the companies made several small concessions.

Mankato to Have "Tag Day."

Mankato.—Mankato is to have a "tag day" to raise funds to support a visiting nurse. Tuesday, May 13, is the day decided on by the Civic league, women's league and the Art History club, which started the movement at a meeting held in the Commercial club. The clubs are also assisting to a movement for the building of a sanitarium hospital for contagious diseases, to be partly supported by the city. The Civic improvement league elected Mrs. W. L. Comstock president for the coming year.

Million Dollar Concern Located.

Minneapolis. — Investing $1,000,000 that its manufactured homes may be centralized in Minneapolis, the Mrs Crex Carpet company of New York will build a mammoth plant on the south side of Como avenue inside the city limits. Work will begin at once. The company has closed its Superior, Wis., plant, and its St. Paul factory will cease to operate when the new Minneapolis plant is completed. Five hundred persons will be employed as soon as the buildings are ready, but 1,200 will be employed eventually.

DOINGS OF THE SOLONS

Minnesota Legislative Affairs of the Past Week—Law Makers Hard at Work.

St. Paul, April 22.—Congressional reapportionment became assured yesterday when the house passed the senate bill by a decisive vote, and amendment. The bill was returned to the upper house today. It is predicted that the senate will refuse to concur and that the entire question will be settled in conference committee.

How Bills Were Saved.

The Nolan and Minnette bills were saved from defeat in the senate yesterday because the iron-bound, cooperative house organization "pocketed" both measures, refusing to let them go to the senate. Speaker Hurd Rinnette, it is expected, will consent to send the bills to the senate for action late today.

But if Mr. Rinse and his followers do not let the bills go to the senate by tomorrow night they will be dead measures anyway, for tomorrow is the last day for passing bills at this character.

Workmen's Bill Repasses.

Both houses have concurred in the conference committee report on the workmen's compensation bill. The bill was repassed to both houses and it now awaits the signature of the governor. With the governor's signature attached to the measure, the workmen have joined the ranks of many other progressive states that have put workmen's compensation laws on the statute books.

As the bill now reads no compensation is to be paid for the first ten weeks after injury, unless medical and hospital fees, etc. The limit for hospital fees, etc., is to be $100, except that this limit may be raised to the action $160 if necessary.

More Extra Session Business.

Passage of a "blue sky" law by the legislature became doubtful yesterday, when the "blue sky" measure and the senate measure and passed the Cahill bill.

The "blue sky" law was one of the principal issues on which Governor Eberhart was elected governor in 1912, and it was stated last night that in the event the legislature should fail to pass such a measure, action would be demanded at the extra session, which is to be called to consider a public utilities bill.

The people of Minnesota will have an opportunity at the next general election to vote on a constitutional amendment giving the right to recall public officials. Both houses of the legislature have agreed to the submission of the recall to the bill and have repassed the measure.

County Officers May Rejoice.

Minnesota county officials within the ranks of the county officers throughout the state were given action taken by the state senate yesterday when it passed the Dunn bill extending the terms of office to four years instead of two. The bill has already passed the house.

Omnibus Bill Passes.

The senate passed what is known as the $1,500,000 omnibus bill yesterday. It carries an appropriation of nearly $1,500,000. The bill includes an appropriation of $500,000 for tuberculosis sanatoria, $250,000 a year. It also includes $100,000 for state fairs, and $50,000 for the counties' share of the tuberculosis fund. The bill was expected to pass the measure today.

Minnesota Bill Passed.

The Minnesota bill was taken up first, and the veto message, which had arrived before recess, was read. Senator Hinkemeyer then moved that the bill be repassed, notwithstanding the veto, and repeated the members' ayes speech. As the roll-call proceeded, it became apparent that the bill would be repassed. The finish of the roll-call was greeted with a cheer. The bill was declared repassed over the veto.

The Nolan bill was passed only after a filibuster had been staged during which friends of the measure, in order to prevent a call of the senate members who had been excused, persuaded enough members to change their votes so as to prevent the necessary eighty votes. Most of the absentees, it was later discovered, believed, would have voted against the bill. The bill would then have been lost

A session of the greatest moment to every woman, married or single, is dealt with in a clean, straight-forward manner, true to life, in the stirring comedy drama, "Senator Examines." It involves a charming story of absorbing interest, beautiful sentiment, tender heart interest and thrilling realism that has won for it a place, second to none, in the hearts of theatre patrons. The characters are all drawn from life, and the author has cleverly avoided stagy and unnatural personalities too often seen on the stage and never in reality. It is one of the big hits of a decade; a comedy drama of intense interest; a play that is sympathetic in its ability to reach the hearts of men, women and children. TRIMMED ST. HILAIRE.

Locals Took Rather Slow Game by 7 Score.

Quite naturally his first base ball game of the season was not a very thrilling contest and it was not an especially fine exhibition of the national game. The locals had the difficulty in taking care of the long end of the score in the game with St. Hilaire on the local grounds Sunday afternoon. But they were unable to break away from a couple of bad innings. It is hoped that they are not to be followed this season by that kind of a hoodoo. There was a fair crowd in attendance, but it was a rather cold day and the game was not worm enough to make up for the bad work of the weather man, so the fans did not get the thrills they expect to have later in the season.

Following is the score by innings:

St. Hilaire—0 2 0 0 0 4 1 0 0—7
R. L. Falls—4 3 2 0 0 4 5 2 x—9

TAKEN TO STILLWATER.

Thief River Falls Man Gets Prison Sentence.

Fred Perry, a former employee of the Crookston Lumber company, was sentenced to an indeterminate term at the state prison last Monday after having plead guilty to a charge of grand larceny in the second degree.

Perry was discovered driving in to a box car in the Soo yards last Thursday evening by Clarence Ole, a car inspector, and Special Agent Neiland police officer Werner. Perry was found driving in a box car and in turn near the Soo yards with several bottles of beer, two gross of snuff, and a couple dozen of oranges and lemons in his possession. Subsequent investigation disclosed the fact that the articles were stolen from the car and he was placed under arrest. He admitted taking the stuff, but at first denied that he had broken in to the car. Later he plead guilty and was sentenced to Stillwater. Sheriff LaBree escorted Perry to the prison last Monday.—Thief River News-Press.

Manager—E. G. Buss.
Secy.-Treas.—Jos. Harzen.
Director—Carlos Annable.
Board of Directors—L. E. Healy, Vern Healy, Omer Hall, Jos. Harzen, E. G. Buss.

The new band is under considerable expense. Much new music has been purchased and it will be necessary to get a few new uniforms. The band is in fine shape financially and assistance and should receive that kind of encouragement.

Dr. Spafford will be in Red Lake Falls Tuesday, June 10, at the Grand View Hotel. —Adv.

John Deere Spreader

The Spreader with the Beater on the Axle

The Simplest Spreader Made

No Chickles No Chains No Adjustments

Easy to Load Roller Bearings Light Draft

Decided Improvement in Spreader Construction

Up to this time every spreader on the market has had the manufactured load of the beater.

The John Deere Spreader, however, is different. It is the only one in the world with the beater on the axle. Therefore it does not carry the load of the beater. The manufactured load is placed entirely on the rear axle, as it should be. This is the John Deere principle.

Beater on Axle

All the working parts of the John Deere Spreader are on the axle. The beater is driven by the same gears that drive the apron. There are no other gears or chains to get out of order. The beater is driven by the power transmitted to the axle of the load on the frame of the spreader.

The power is transmitted to the beater from the rear axle and operates through a planetary transmission similar to that used on automobiles mounted on four rear axle within the beater.

Light Draft—Easy Runs

There are at least two reasons why the John Deere Spreader is easy on the horses. It has the best spreader made. One reason is that the use of roller bearings throughout the machine and ten on the rear axle. They reduce the draft materially.

Another reason is that the John Deere Spreader is low down. It has about the best type of carriage that the spreader manufacturers have ever used. It is so low that the load of manure is not lifted very high. The load is placed on the spreader with the minimum amount of lifting and the draft is reduced by this feature.

Easy to Load

The first three feet are occupied with an ordinary spreader are carried at an angle. This reduces the height to the top of an ordinary spreader.

It is only necessary to use forks for the last few feet. Thus the hard work of loading a manure spreader is done away with. The John Deere Spreader is the main side boards are carried at an angle. The load can be loaded.

Easy to Load

No Adjustments

On the John Deere Spreader there is no adjustment. All the weight of load is carried by the rear axle. The apron is driven directly by the rear axle. There is no adjustment necessary to make it run easy.

Easy to Load

Out of Gear

Positive Non-Raking Apron

By the use of a very simple locking device the apron is thrown out of gear. The beater keeps right on working when operating on hill or over exceedingly rough ground. This is done with a patented device used on the John Deere Spreader only. This device is positive and will not get out of order.

Control of Feed

Change of feed is accomplished by a lever. This lever is connected with a device which increases the number of teeth the rapidity change at each stroke. The feed is changed from a light feed to a heavy feed from five to twenty-five loads to the acre.

Like the Dodson Rolling Bridge

Built for rolling with the load. It is the only one of high wheel spreaders that is provided with the dynamic brake. The dynamic brake system is used on the Dodson Rolling Bridge. Ball Bearings are fitted four inches from the end of the axle. This makes the load lighter, thereby reducing the draft. Ball Like a Steel Tire Wheels. Write to-day for our free catalog.

Even if You Don't Need a New Spreader Now, Come in and See It.

The Spreaders of this make that we have already sent out this spring are giving excellent satisfaction. Two horses will handle them under ordinary conditions and three horses will haul them anywhere that a Manure Spreader of any make will work. Now is the time to top dress your growing crops so call in and let us show you this wonderful spreader.

SPECIAL ELECTION NEXT TUESDAY

TO VOTE ON PROPOSITION TO ISSUE REFUNDING BONDS OF THE CITY.

Next Tuesday, May 12, is the date for the special election called for the purpose of voting on the proposition to issue and negotiate refunding bonds to the amount of $54,000 to take up the city's floating indebtedness.

The city has a rather large floating indebtedness, evidenced by hundreds of city warrants in the hands of many people. It has been ascertained that the amount of this indebtedness, principal and interest, is $54,000, and it is proposed to take up these widely scattered evidences of debt and put the city's finances on a cash basis. If this is done the city will be saved a considerable sum of money annually and the work of keeping the city's records will be simplified.

There is no reason why any thinking man should be opposed to the proposition and it should carry by a practically unanimous vote.

New Depot for Thief River.

Plans for the new Soo depot which will be built on the present depot site during the course of the coming summer, arrived at Superintendent Barnard's office for inspection the first part of the week. The specifications call for a two-story brick or stone building, measuring about 30x60 feet. On the main floor is one large waiting room 30x75 feet and two small ones 17x20. The ticket office will occupy the center of the first floor also. The second story will be used entirely for offices; the superintendent's office occupying the south end of the building. Besides the large general office for clerks, and stenographers, the chief clerk, train dispatcher, chief dispatcher, road master and telegraph operators will each have seperate offices.

The building will cost in the neighborhood of $48,000 and will be built very similar to the Soo depot at Minot that has the reputation of being one of the most artistic and complete railroad depots in the west—Thief River News-Press.

$75,000,000 TRUST DEED REGISTERED

LENGTHY INSTRUMENT EFFECTING LOTS—POWER PLANT.

A trust deed for $75,000,000 was yesterday recorded in the office of Register of Deeds Kedmell. This transferred large holdings of properties in the states of Minnesota, North Dakota and Wisconsin. The property in Grand Forks included in the deed are eight lots in the block used by the Red River Power plant for office and power plant, and the entire block that is used by the company for the gas storage plant.

The Consumers Power company has large interests in nearly all of the power, light and street railway companies in the northwestern cities before mentioned. The trust deed was made out to the Standard Trust company of New York city and Edward M. F. Miller, trustee.

The Minot Light and Power company, the Red Lake Falls company, the Red River Power company, many concerns in the Twin Cities, and numerous other power and light companies are either wholly or partially controlled by this large concern.

This instrument was the largest ever recorded at the Grand Forks county register of deed's office, and is probably the largest of the kind that was ever filed in the state of North Dakota. Register of Deeds Kedmell is used to recording big deals but this one nearly took his breath away.—Grand Forks Herald.

BIG INCREASE IN AID FOR SCHOOLS

ADVANCE OF 25 TO 40 PER CENT IN MANY INSTANCES.

(Special Correspondence.)

St. Paul, May 5.—Is Minnesota going educationally mad? It looks that way—at any rate Governor Eberhart is so convinced. You could hardly get him to indulge in the language I have used in calling attention to the fact, but when he says "this is too much" in calling attention to the principles' burden of taxation this year, which is state aid to schools, you can bet your last dollar he has not made the statement without proper investigation of the facts. Governor Eberhart never shoots unless he knows his target and to the particular matter a pull on the trigger means a bull's eye every time. There is no chance of missing. Three whole days last week he exercised gats over to a consideration of the four appropriation bills effered for his signature and his conclusion was this: "The present legislature has increased the state aid for schools in many instances from 25 to 40 per cent and if the present rate of increase shall continue year after year a tremendous increase in state taxes not necessarily needed. I am loath and sou for the advancement of education in the state, but this is too much." Continuing, his excellency dwelt at length on the increase in the mill levy, deplored his inability to shove down the various items and indicated in the hope that succeeding legislatures would see their way clear to curb the growing tendency toward extravagance.

Of course it should stop, but it won't until some one big enough to handle the situation takes the bit in his teeth and cries halt. Knowing a friend of the governor, had he taken the bit and drove a carriage and four through the omnibus bill instead of lopping off a paltry $216,000 from a total appropriation of $21,000,000 he would be the biggest man in the state today. Of course there would be sore spots—even the $216,000 he lopped off has brought him enemies—but the great mass of taxpayers would have been with him. Few appreciate the tremendous power the educational trust wields in Minnesota, and I use the word "trust" advisedly, for that is what that large body engaged in teaching the young idea has grown to be. The university is its chief stamping ground. When it is not on the job the annual meeting of the State Educational association supplies the necessary ammunition. Between the two it is state aid for this line of endeavor, state aid for the proper baking of doughnuts, or perhaps some line of domestic science that has existed since the time of Adam, but which experts are confident is not properly taught at home. And so on down the line it goes.

But if it stopped at the baking of doughnuts, the teaching of lecemaking or the hundred and one things that experts looking for a job succeed in foisting on the legislature, one might not kick. But it does not. Many districts, seeing this state aid pour into their coffers, have found in it a way to cut down local support for their home schools and they are now pushing the thing for all it is worth. Let the population centers pay the bill, is the cry; but, gentlemen, the population centers may rebel some day and then look out. This coming year the people will vote on an amendment to the constitution providing for the initiative and referendum and unless I miss my guess there will be trouble if the amendment passes and the voters in the population centers wise up to its curves. It is a two-edged sword and Governor Eberhart had it in mind when he advised the lawmakers have a care.

The old axe about "penny wise and pound foolish" has exemplification in the heavy cattle shipments to South St. Paul and other packing points. As a result of the deluge which pookers say is because of the desire of the cattle owners to get away from the assessor, who started on his rounds May 1, the price of cattle has been forced down many points. Had the cattle been in the farmers' pens on May 1 they would have been assessed as personal belongings. Because of the heavy shipments it will take weeks for the market to recover and in the meantime not only will the farmer be out of pocket but likewise the state.

We are sure a funny lot of muts. Now the interested are finding out what the late legislature put over them in the way of laws and the howl that has gone up in some quarters because of this and that indliction is something frightful. And yet for three months this same bunch of in-

Flax Not "Hard on Land."

It has long been thought that the growing of flax was "hard on the land." This idea has no foundation in fact; nor is there any reason for adhering to it. The idea has gained acceptance because of the two reasons for decreased production. One of these is flax-wilt, a fungus disease, which kills the young plants and says with the crop for that year. The other is the meager root system of the flax, which demands a goodly amount of available plant food. For these reasons, flax will do best upon a soil in which there is a large percentage of organic matter—a soil well supplied with moisture and free from flax-wilt disease. These conditions are under the control of the farmer, as pointed out in Extension Bulletin No. 2—C. P. Bull, Agronomy Division, University Farm, St. Paul, Minn.

Brooks Defeated Monday by a Score of 8 to 4.

The home ball team of Brooks were treated to an exhibition of the national game Sunday afternoon that was a dilly. The contestants were Brooks and Mentor and it was everybody's game until the ninth until the end of the ninth inning.

Mentor is said to have a strong line-up this season and Brooks has been strengthened by securing the Connors boys who played with Fertile last season and by Louis Preston who came from Wisconsin after the season opened. Grace Brooks, Preston played a star game for the field, pulling down some wide ones, and drove in the winning score with a three-base hit in the last half of the ninth inning.

ROAD TAXES TO BE PAID IN CASH

BUT NEW LAW IS NOT EFFECTIVE UNTIL NEXT YEAR.

Among the many provisions of the Dunn good roads law are those making radical changes in the duties of local town officers in the matter of collecting and disbursing the road tax. However, the law does not go into effect until July 1, and the road taxes will be "worked out" as usual this year.

After this year all road taxes will be paid in cash and all road work for a township will be done under the direction of the board of township supervisors. Such work must be voted at the annual town meeting just as taxes are voted for any other public purpose. If for any reason there is a failure to vote a road tax the town board is to have authority to levy such up to a certain limit.

Provision is made for a "dragging fund", a small tax levy imposed for this purpose, and a person may contract to drag a certain piece of road at stipulated times at a fixed price per mile. He may not in any case be more than a dollar per mile.

The office of road overseer is to cease is abolished and the board will appoint a road overseer for the entire town who will have charge under the supervision of the board of the construction of all town roads and the maintenance of all town and county roads in the town.

Though these and other changes provided for are not to be made until next year township officials and others interested will do well to read the law which is Chapter 225 of the general laws of Minnesota passed at the legislative session of 1913 and may be found on page 16 of the supplement published with the last issue of the Gazette. The Gazette has several extra copies of the supplement on hand and will give them to people who may desire them.

CROSSING THE RIVER

Putting Water Mains Under Bed of Clearwater River is a Difficult Task.

Men are now at work putting the waterworks mains under the bed of the Clearwater river and are finding it a very difficult task. The bed of the stream is rather rocky and making it almost impossible to construct a trench in which the mains can be laid. It has taken several days to construct a small section of the dam and progress with the digging in that section is very slow.

With the putting of the mains across the river and the construction of the pumping station the work of the waterworks contractor will be completed.

Nick Dreen, who has the contract for the city well has the pipe down to a depth of about two hundred feet.

White of the Tuttle school in Minneapolis and Miss Gertrude Sutton, supervisor of second and third grades in the Hibbing schools.

COME BACK FROM CANADA.

Many Who Left the States Seeking Homes Are Returning to Return.

(Washington Post.)

"While it is true that a great many Americans have emigrated to Canada from the northwestern states, it is equally true that a large percentage of these emigrants have returned," said H. D. Chambers, immigration agent of one of the large railroads of the northwest at the New Willard. "In the last twelve years, according to the best statistics, close to 1,000,000 Americans have gone to Canada. I should say that not 50,000 of them became naturalized Canadians, and many thousands of them have come back to the United States. There were 35,000 emigrants to Canada who went through the Great Falls immigration office. This appears to be a very large number, and is, in fact, but the figures are misleading for the reason that many of the emigrants were men who went into Canada merely for the harvesting season and returned later in the season to their homes.

"There are comparatively few farm owners in the northwestern states who sell out and move their chattels to Canada. The Canadian immigration agents and the government officials of Canada have held out alluring inducements to the farmers of the United States, and have done everything they could legitimately to encourage emigration, and while they have succeeded in a manner gratifying to them, they have not seriously affected the farming population of the United States. There are cheap lands in Canada, but they require years of cultivation and many hundreds of dollars' worth of improvements before they can be classed with the farming lands of the United States."

TARIFF SCHEDULES CAUSE WRANGLING

REPUBLICAN AMENOMENTS TO TARIFF ARE VOTED DOWN AT NIGHT SESSION.

QUESTION OF A COMMISSION

Discussion Puts House in Uproar—Speaker Clark Asserts Majority of Republicans Opposed Commission.

Washington, May 1.—Excited debates and a heated wrangle marked the beginning of the reading of the Democratic tariff bill in the house for amendment.

Progress is Slow.

Progress on the perfection of the measure was slow, but the talk was loud and vociferous and on one occasion brought Speaker Clark on the floor with a vigorous speech.

All day the Republicans offered amendments to the various passages in the chemical schedule and every amendment was calmly voted down by the Democratic majority. Several minor amendments offered by the ways and means committee to correct the phraseology of the bill were adopted.

Most of the talk of the day turned on the records of the Democratic side of the house on the question of creating a tariff commission.

The Republicans, led by Representative Mann of Illinois, began their attacks on the various provisions of the first schedule of the bill, the chemical schedule, by declaring that the weaknesses in the law showed the needs of investigations of a tariff board.

Says Board Was Prevented.

Representative Underwood, in reply, declared that the Democrats had provided the bureau of foreign and Democratic commerce in the department of commerce and that the failure of the Taft administration to vitalize that bureau with sufficient appropriations had prevented its doing the work of tariff investigation.

Representative Gardner of Massachusetts said that Representative Underwood and other Democrats had voted for the tariff commission in the Sixty-first congress when the Republicans were in power and urged that they support the Republican proposition now. Then Representative Murdock, the Progressive leader, taunted the Democrats. He declared that both Republicans and Democrats were opposed to the tariff commission schemes, and recalled the last day of the Sixty-first congress, "Uncle Joe" Cannon's final appearance at the speaker's desk, when the tariff commission bill was withdrawn by the Republicans in the face of a filibuster, led by Representative Fitzgerald of New York.

"The Republicans in this chamber have changed Mr. Murdock," said the Republicans in this chamber now, were only pretending to be for a tariff commission. They had their chance to write that bill into a law then and there and they will never have another chance."

Murdock's Charge Denied.

The Republicans grew excited and Representative Gardner shouted that there was no foundation for Mr. Murdock's charge that the Republican leaders were in a conspiracy to defeat the tariff commission bill.

Gesticulating wildly, Mr. Gardner demanded the opinion of Representative Sherley of Kentucky as to the truth of the charge. Mr. Sherley said he believed most of the Republicans opposed the bill. Then Representative Gardner, shaking a finger at Speaker Clark, demanded to know whether he would take the charge. The speaker strode to the center of the house and shouted:

"I'll intimate to that there never was a Republican leader in this house and I never of a satisfied majority."

Mr. Gardner sat down and the speaker went on.

He declared that he was against a tariff commission reporting to and responsible to the president.

"It is the house that should have the information," he said.

Amendments Voted Down.

When the schedule on earths and earthenware, the second schedule of the bill, was taken up at the night session, Representative Dixon of Indiana, who had charge of the preparation of that schedule in the ways and means committee, took his place on the right hand of Majority Leader Underwood and led the debate.

The Republicans made ineffectual attempts to increase the rate in the bill on Portland cement, gypsum, fluorine and other mineral products.

New York Japanese Support President.

New York, April 28.—The Japan society, at a meeting of its executive committee adopted a message which was forwarded to the president, supporting him "in all he is doing to maintain the honor of the nation" in his attitude toward California's proposed anti-Japanese legislation. The resolution had still, the message declares, ignores treaty obligations of the United States and is directed against a friendly nation that has "scrupulously observed its engagements to this country."

Industrial Workers Indicted.

Paterson, N. J., April 28.—Indictments against William D. Haywood and four other members of the Industrial Workers of the World who have taken an active leadership in the silk strike here, have been filed in the county court. Haywood is accused of disorderly conduct, as is Adolph Lessig, a local leader. The indictments are the result of a grand jury investigation of the disturbances that have attended the strike, now in its ninth week and involving nearly 25,000 workers.

WAS $2,500,000 HEA STOLEN?

CHICAGOAN CLAIMS HE ORIGINATED PLAN FOR MERGING CITY'S ELEVATED ROADS.

Declares His Was Denied Credit for Enterprise and Any of the Profits—Negotiations for Purchase Merger Suspended.

Chicago, April 30—Charges that a $2,500,000 idea, by which the Chicago elevated railroads were merged in 1911, was appropriated by Henry A. Blair, chairman of the board of directors of the Chicago Railways company, were contained in a suit filed by J. B. Hogarth, formerly auditor of the Chicago City Railway company and later general superintendent of the Chicago Railways company.

Would Force Payment.

Hogarth, in his suit, seeks to force the payment of $2,500,000 as his share of the promotional fees for work on the merger.

The National City bank, the Chicago Elevated Railway's collateral trust, the Chicago Railways company, the Commonwealth Edison company, Frank Vesdervlis, Samuel McRoberts, Samuel Insull and H. Cobe, also are made defendants in the suit.

Hogarth charges that the National City bank of New York now is planning to dispose of the elevated properties to the city of Chicago for $100,000,000 although the full cost of effecting the mergers, he says, was only $64,071,052.

Hogarth alleges that the plan of the merger was conceived and worked out by him, that he enlisted the aid of Blair in effecting the deal, and that when the merger was completed Blair gave him any credit for the enterprise and had withheld his share of of the promoters' profits.

Hogarth was discharged as auditor of the Chicago City railway company previously in 1908, he alleges in the bill of complaint, because he said he declined to keep a secret, as well as a public act of books and because he claimed to have learned that notes of $1,500,000 were improperly augmenting $1,170,000 were held by the First Trust and Savings Bank of Chicago and of which he was unable to find any record on the books of the company.

Went to New York.

After his discharge, Hogarth related, he had visited New York and personally informed George W. Perkins and Charles S. Steele of the firm of J. P. Morgan and company, of these facts.

Both of these men, he declared, begged him not to disclose the matter to J. Pierpont Morgan.

Negotiations for a merger of the surface and elevated roads of Chicago were ordered suspended by the city council at a night meeting following the filing of the Hogarth suit. The aldermen also ordered investigation of the charges that the city was to be overcharged nearly $20,000,000 in the sale of the elevated properties. The investigation was ordered to include an inquiry into the charges that the Chicago Railways company had defrauded the city by keeping a double set of books of the returns due under the settlement.

The session of the council was marked by stormy exchanges during the debate. The investigation was ordered by a vote of 42 to 17.

STATE STILL HAS PROTECTION

MISSOURI INSURANCE POLICIES ARE STILL IN EFFECT.

Governor Major Will Fight for Plan for State Fire Insurance, Tells Newspapermen.

St. Louis, May 1.—Although the great majority of the fire insurance companies that have been doing business in Missouri have announced their intention of ceasing to write policies after today, the state will not be deprived of insurance protection.

Even bed not 34 foreign companies and five home concerns informed Insurance Superintendent Revelle at Jefferson City they would continue to do business, the state would not immediately be without protection, as none of the companies has announced its intention of cancelling its policies and for the past two weeks nearly average agency has been a rushing business in writing new policies. Many business concerns took out new policies before their present policies expired, thus having to pay for double insurance.

Governor Major told newspaper men he would back up insurance Superintendent Revelle's plan for state fire insurance. Revelle declared he would endeavor to have the legislature, at its next session, pass such laws as would make it strictly insurance, pass a law enabling the state to write fire insurance. The governor intimated he would make such a recommendation in his message to the legislature.

A sub-committee of the citizens' committee named last week to investigate the insurance situation, decided yesterday to recommend at the meeting of the committee on Thursday, that the referendum be not asked and all that the United States was willing to grant.

ANNEXATION IS BEING URGED

American Capitalists to Buy Lower California and Want a Part of United States.

San Diego, Cal., April 30.—Claiming that $25,000,000 has been pledged for the purchase of Lower California from the Mexican government by a band of American capitalists, T. J. McGilmpsey, a large property owner at Punta Banda, across the bay from Ensenada, Lower California, declared here the deal would be consummated soon and annexation by the United States would be agitated immediately afterward. He says the plan was considered favorably by the late President Madero, but that some difficulty with the Huerta regime is feared. He declined to state who the capitalists are.

Leon Gomez, Mexican consul, says that before such a deal could be made it noted the constitution of Mexico would have to be changed by a vote of the people in Lower California obtained before a majority in favor of the annexation.

COMPROMISE BILL BEING CONSIDERED

CALIFORNIA MAJORITY LEAGERS BELIEVE NEW MEASURE WILL SOLVE PROBLEM.

JAPS BARRED FROM FARMS

Permitted to Lease Land for Residential and Commercial Purposes Only—Bryan Declines to Comment.

Sacramento, Cal., May 1.—The possibility of an amicable adjustment of the alien land controversy by means of a new bill drawn in strict conformity with the treaty between Japan and the United States, confronted the third secret conference of Secretary of State Bryan with Governor Johnson and the California legislature.

New Measure Drafted.

Attorney General U. S. Webb drafted the new measure at the suggestion of Governor Johnson and a copy was placed immediately in the hands of Secretary Bryan. The term "ineligible to citizenship," which is declared by Secretary Bryan to be odious to the Japanese, is not included, and Progressive Republican leaders say that since they have arrived at a solution of the problem that will receive the indorsement of President Wilson.

Secretary Bryan declined to comment upon the bill, except in the conference.

The principal features of the bill are as follows:

1—All aliens eligible to citizenship may acquire and hold land in the same manner as citizens of the United States.

2—All other aliens may acquire and hold land "in the manner and to the extent and for the purposes prescribed by any treaty now existing between the government of the United States and the nation or country of which such alien is a citizen or subject.

3—Corporations composed of Other than those eligible to citizenship may acquire and hold land only according to the terms of existing treaties.

Present Holdings Respected.

Present holdings of aliens, regardless of their rights to citizenship, are protected.

The state specifically reserves its sovereign right to enact any and all laws relating to the acquisition or holding of real property by aliens.

Attorney General Webb worked upon the theory that there could be no objection to writing into the California statute the specific limitations of the Japanese treaty of 1911. Under the terms of this treaty Japanese subjects are permitted to own "houses and lands for residential purposes, factories, manufactories and shops," according to Mr. Webb. Another clause of the agreement allows Japanese subjects to lease land for "residential and commercial purposes."

These are the only stipulations made, and it is the belief of the attorney general that the rights of Japanese subjects to land ownership in fee would back up insurance by it. Under his construction of the treaty, he says, land now leased by a Japanese for agricultural purposes, extending as it does in some cases for as long as forty years, would not be affected by the new bill.

The state does not draw the line upon aliens who are ineligible to citizenship, but if their deeds are not good, it gives not only to Japan, but to every nation whose subjects are ineligible to citizenship under the laws of the United States, the full rights to ownership in land in California that are the treaties between the United States and such nations give."

ROD THAT LOCATES SPRINGS

Member of Congress of "Spring Seekers" in Paris Has Invented Instrument to Find Wells.

Paris, France.—There was recently demonstrated during the congress of "Spring Seekers" in Paris, what ordinarily would be considered magic of the highest order.

With the aid of a sensitized rod, M. Paloprat, a member of the congress, was able to discover a hidden spring that up to that time had been unheard of. The photograph shows M. Paloprat surrounded by members of the press and the congress on the spot on the Bois de Vincennes where he actually located a spring of pure fresh water.

In America, we have often heard of the magical rod that possesses the power of discovering hidden oil or minerals. These rods, invented by an ingenious "get-rich-quick" genius, were nothing more nor less than a mean of separating gullible folks from their ready cash. It is because of this that many Americans, reading of this wonderful divining rod, may be skeptical, yet the truth remains that M. Paloprat discovered not only one spring where a very extensive search been unheard of, but a number of them.

The secret is one with which he does not care to part. The rod is of metal; nothing out of the ordinary excepting that it is sensitized. It is composed of two long pieces and one very part of the garment of the wearer, who holds both ends firmly in his hands. When the searcher arrives at a place where a spring is to be found, the rod undergoes a series of violent vibrations, similar to those recorded by a seismograph when an earthquake thousands of miles away takes place.

MINISTER BESTS THE BENCH

Witness Spars With Judge in Dublin Court and Carries Off the Honors.

London.—A little sparring match between the church and the law recently amused Dublin. The case concerned a certain Protestant minister of a Biblical subject which is to be shown in films.

Threatened with an injunction, the cinematograph syndicate produced several clergymen as witnesses to the edifying effect of the film. One of them was a distinguished Irish cleric, who has been dubbed "the Father Bernard Vaughan of Ireland."

"Do you approve of the scenes simulating such scenes in cold blood for the purpose of amusement, sir, or if?" he was asked.

"I have no answer yes or no," was the cautious reply.

"Your answer is a very plain one," said the judge, a well known lion of the bar a few years back.

"This act does not draw the line upon aliens who are ineligible to citizenship, but if their deeds are not good, it gives not only to Japan, but to every nation whose subjects are ineligible to citizenship under the laws of the United States, the full rights to ownership in land in California that are the treaties between the United States and such nations give."

Lost Mines of the Great Southwest

By Joe Minster

From Data Furnished by Horace J. West

(Copyright by Ridgway Co.)

WHEN the railroads built their trans-continental systems, one of their greatest difficulties lay in the supply of water for the men who were working on the projects. Great wagon-trains were frequently essential to bring sufficient of the supply to make work for a week or a time possible. Even after the completion of the roads there was difficulty in obtaining water for the purpose of supplying the engines or the little stations necessary wherever there was a siding.

In order to secure water in abundance, the Santa Fe railroad ordered a tunnel bored in the Clipper range, located in San Bernardino county from eight to ten miles northwest of Danby, the station to which it was to be piped if discovered in a large quantity. This did happen within a score of years. The men who volunteered for the work, a competent mining man, who was well acquainted with the mining shafts and the boring of tunnels, was Thomas Schofield of Los Angeles.

Tiring of work one day in early June of 1894, he started on a prospecting trip, something which he did whenever he felt in need of relaxation. He wandered into one of the canyons close at hand and discovered there a spring. What to him was more surprising and even startling was the trail that led up the canyon, stopping at the watering place.

The trail, at times very indistinct because of the solid rock formation, led over a ridge or four small hills, the hogback of two ranges and then into another canyon. This he followed until it ended in a blank wall and he realized that the trail had been lost. Going back to the last distance he discovered it winding up the side of the hill. It led to two immense rocks, rivalling the towers of an old English castle. They seemed to form the portal to the wealth beyond, and nature had set them so closely together that they allowed just sufficient passageway to permit a burro well packed to enter.

And just beyond the portal stood an isolated rock. There beside the thick boulder of enormous size stood the shards of what had been a camp. The wooden upright supports were still standing and draped from them, flapping in the breeze, were the shreds of what had been a tent. Brush had been carefully piled up around the sides. Inside there was a heap of boughs, still covered with a blanket, which was, like the tent covering, disfigured and ragged. The signs of the place and the fact that man had been making his habitation there struck Schofield like a blow from a fist.

A pile of rallroad ties, a number of rusty old axes which had been used as wedges for splitting the ties for lagging, a few other mining tools and some badly decomposed food still lay about the place, indicating very sudden abandonment of the camp by its owner. The most conspicuous of all things about the place was an old-fashioned, heavily rusted Dutch oven, the largest Schofield had ever seen and a trifle over two feet in diameter. So oppressive was the place and so nerve-racking the immediate strain, that he continued on the trail which led away from the camp.

Just a short distance away he came to a shaft where considerable work had been done. It was sunk upon a series of small stringers that ran parallel to one another for a long distance and at intervals of about six inches. He counted twelve of these peculiar formations in the rock and they were of almost solid gold! He tested them, "horning" great strings of coarse gold.

The surrounding ore was of the white-blue quartz formation, and "to me the stringers, running through the dark porphyry, appeared a bed of roses of golden hues hidden in the depths of a giant bed of violets," said Schofield in telling of his discovery. "I traced these lines of high-grade ore for a distance of nearly 2,000 feet, and found them widening and enlarging as they went. They interested me so that I failed to notice for hours that the day was fast waning and that I would be forced to remain there over night.

"The mystery, the awe and even the fear of that night I shall never forget. Was I in the haunt of a robber crew who had found wealth far richer than could be obtained from the rich waterless trade in the city? Had the owners been cruelly murdered and their wealth carried off by some one else? Was I the victim of some strange phantasmagoria, that I would awake to find all the wealth and the adventure of the day a dream? These and countless other suggestions coursed through my thinking brain, and I slept little this night.

"In the morning I explored the shaft or the first light of breaking sun above the jagged skyline of burning peaks. I found that the shaft had been sunk to possibly seventy or eighty feet, that it was equipped with a windlass, rope and bucket and that it had been set timbered all the way to the bottom. Outside I discovered a large pile of ore, indicative of the fact that little or none of the product of the mine had ever been carried away.

"After scattering a number of fine samples and a large quantity of the horned gold, I went back to the camp and there awoke I was startled by the Dutch oven. Something seemed to draw me toward it. It combined gold! Half of it was full of the product and there was I unable to cart it away. At the bottom of the pile resided there were of such an old stamp that I never had dreamed of it would be right or wrong. The idea of possession of so much wealth nearly overwhelmed me, and after grasping some of it I started back to the camp by the tunnel, planning a trip to Los Angeles to see whether it was really gold that I had found."

And when Schofield had his ore and his metal tested he found that it was the real article and that he had made himself richer by many hundred dollars with just the small amount he had been able to lug out on his person. It fired him with the desire to return at once and obtain all of the treasure if the right owners had not returned. But he never had been able to find his way to the Dutch oven!

In coming weeks from the mine he had paid little heed to the general direction taken. He had followed the trail blindly on the way up and again on his return journey. Consequently after a number of weeks, when he returned with a partner to look for the treasure and found that seven terrific rains and even a waterspout had been

After Many Days.

A Glasco man is the beneficiary of some tender conscience, according to the Minneapolis Messenger. This week he received through the mail a 10 bill neatly wrapped in a slip of paper, with nothing to indicate from whom it came. The envelope was postmarked at the local office. The recipient got a like amount in the same manner a little over a year ago. A few years back he missed some money and suspected that it had been stolen, but was unable to fasten the guilt on any one. He now concludes that the guilty one has become conscience stricken and wants to make good.—Topeka Capital.

Birds Have Large Appetites.

Birds, in proportion to their weight, eat much more than any other living thing. It is a mystery to naturalists how the ring dove flies after its accustomed meal. One dove was found with 600 peas in its crop; another, in captivity, was known to eat 180 beech nuts at a time, and a third devoured 60 acorns. The robin often eats two and one-half times its weight in 24 hours, while a barnyard hen with chicks has been observed to consume 470 times in the course of a day. The diet of a certain species of hawk composes about 3,000 mice in the course of a month, besides other food. In the month of a young heron were found three trout, each weighing three-quarters of a pound. Another was found with seven small trout in its mouth, a mouse and thrush, evidently on its way to its nest. The growing shood of it, his plans became hazy. The water had obliterated all signs of a trail and his knowledge of getting back was gone with it.

Men will sacrifice love, life, riches and kindred things is there is a great opportunity presented for the accomplishment of sudden wealth. Strange alliances, stories of murder, long local fights and bitterest enmity have grown up in the southwest as an adjunct to the contention for treasure. Among the strange stories that are more widely known is that which has to do with a lost placer of great riches.

It finds its origin in the early eighties, either 1883 or 1884, when a white man, a lone prospector, wandered into the camp of the Piute Indians at Piute Bend on the Nevada side of the Colorado river. The bend only lay a few miles above Fort Mohave, and it is there that Jamison, which is generally given as the man's name, gathered his first inklings of the storied wealth accumulated by several members of the tribe.

They were said to know of several great gold deposits in the desert and mountains contiguous to their place of living, and from these they frequently brought to Fort Mohave splendid specimens of nuggets and gold dust. This gold they traded for a half or third of its actual value, buying the baubles and the gaudy apparel so dear to the heart of the red men. It also led occasionally to serious trouble, attempts of unscrupulous whites to obtain their secrets, sometimes even by force, usually by some chicanery.

Jamison took a course which brought him in direct and continued contact with all members of the tribe. Finally he met one of the squaws who after a year or two of living with the Indians had secured from the chief his consent. This squaw he was indebted for the discovery of an immensely rich placer, which it at all seasons of the year was apparently impossible.

To what will till the snow falls and covers all the trails, and the rest of the year is Jamison.

They waited for two years for such a time to come, some one always remaining in the vicinity of the country every year. And when it came, the Indian took his retinue of braves for a long journey, to a place of three peaks and a place where no water was obtainable, save through melting of the snow, and there they gathered from beneath the white cloak much gravel, and carried it back to their people. Indians in force!

Feeling assured, then, of the wealth he was to gather, Jamison wrote an old eastern friend and summoned him to the fort. It is said to have been Fields. He told Fields all about the wealth in the gravel, and of his desire for riches that within a few months Fields had arrived at Fort Mohave. Jamison left the Indians with the excuse that he had to look after particular business in California.

Then Fields he went to Homer, a station on the Santa Fe railroad in San Bernardino county, California. There they purchased a team of good mules with some of the gold that Jamison had saved from his first trip and they loaded an old buckboard with a barrel of water and a few provisions and started out, driving south into the Mojave Desert. From all reports they probably traveled forty miles that day and night, arriving at the mountains early the next morning.

"There we climbed a mesa," said Fields, telling of the discovery in after years. "And on top of this proceeded with our work, which merely consisted in scraping the gravel in heaps and panning it out in the usual manner. We brought along for the purpose. The water which had been left in the barrel was used in the tub. The gravel was nearly half gold, so rich that it needed panned not. We became careless in our work, plotting of only the richest of the nuggets, and dumped the residue of fine gold and dust into the tub. This we kept for a night's sport when we should return to camp.

Want of water, the hoodoo that has menaced every prospector at one time or another in the southwest, came upon them at nightfall when they were forced to give to the two mules the water that had been used for panning. It was less than enough to quench their thirst, and in half panic they hastened toward their lair, but full of dust, and their gold pan in a small cave which they had observed in one of the little canyons leading off the mesa.

Then came their retreat, as ignominious as any in the history of beleft an army. With all their wealth they were forced to run. A panic seemed to overtake them and they lagged their mules through the desert night, trying to get to Homer before the break of day and the heat that came with it in that unseasonable period. With nothing to eat they found themselves in a sad plight. They had left the old pathless, even in a country new to them, had not a drop of water and scarcely a handful of food.

With breaking light came hope. Way off in the distance they discerned the goldspot that has led to many a salvation in the desert waste: telegraph poles strung at regular intervals. To them, then and the wheel tracks they marked was their aim. Through three hours of tortuous work, walking instead of trying to ride behind the wagon and mules, they struggled on, their tongues lolling black from out their mouths, their throats burned to a deep crimson, their eyes bulging in continued effort and strain.

And reaching the road, they could discern, just a short distance to the right, a few straggling buildings, the little outpost of civilization, with promise of water if nothing more. And this they reached eventually, pulling their mules behind them. They were found by an old miner who happened on to the broad wooden platform of the only bar in that locality during the noon siesta of the town. They were more dead than alive, and it took several hours of hard work to bring them to. For two days they were out of their minds.

The first thought on coming to was their gold! Had they lost it? Had it been stolen? They directed search for it in the wagon, and there it lay in a large canvas sack, untouched by the men who had cared for the mules. When it was weighed, the sum found themselves in possession of $15,000 for a single day's work! The story of their find and their return with it in a few hours. A stampede for gold was on. For days and weeks it continued, but never successfully. Their trail had been obliterated in the winds that continually sway the sand from dune to dune and obliterates ceaselessly through ages.

It was a week before Jamison and Fields could travel. They packed up all of the gold dust and in their swaying buckboard they drove to Needles, where Fields with his share of the gold started for the east to secure capital for development. Jamison turned his mules back to Homer then, and on back to the Piute Bend to be indians, arriving there in a delirium caused by a relapse into fever acquired on the trip from the diggings. His squaw nursed him tenderly and medicine men of the tribe gave him charms, but Jamison died.

Fields came back when he heard of this. He had a chicken heart induced by past experiences, and nothing would induce him to start afresh on quest of wealth that lay hidden in the desert near the three peaks.

He sent other men for him, giving them a men of the country as he had conceived it, but they all failed in the execution of the treasure.

Three men rode leisurely out of the Panamint range of mountains at the edge of that famous sink of mystery, Death Valley, and on across country toward San Bernardino, their destination. They were all on good horses, had ample packs, and ten-gallon water canteens. They rode through the heat of the day, their horses kicking up the dust of the desert and leaving behind a continuous hazy vapor which always distinguishes anything astir in the country in the desert wastes.

During the heat of the day they stopped to camp in the sheds of their freight teams were watered and fed. Soon they started on. This time there was not the same caution, the same responsibility, among them, and a quarrel arose as to the proper direction to take. They quarreled all that afternoon, and finding their water-supply practically all gone on the following morning, their words almost resulted in blows. They separated.

One of them, Frank Goler, struck out alone in an easterly direction, while the other two went south.

By noon of the second day Goler had arrived at a series of low hills that lay directly in his path. He crossed them, and on the other side he discovered a canyon into which he plunged without the least fear and with renewed hope of salvation. It contained abundance of water, and he drank more than all the rest, it carried in its deepest embrace a little mountain stream.

Arriving at its banks, Goler, nearly delirious from lack of water, got on his hands and knees and dropped to the edge of the stream and began lapping up the cool, bright water. And while he drank, the rays of the sun, falling on the fellow, of an overhanging cottonwood, glinted upon something in the bottom of the stream something yellow just beyond the touch of his lips.

It was a nugget of gold as large as a hickory nut. There were others near it, and Goler, bewildered at his good fortune, pulled forth three of the pieces of gold and then stopped to think. For he had not taken nourishment for more than a day.

He lacked the knowledge of the Indians in their chart, caught his horse, mounted, and then proceeded with all possible speed down the canyon, taking little time to make footprints or survey of the location of the treasure. Finally, after several hours of rough riding he came upon a open plain. Just ahead of him he saw what appeared to be a human body at rest. It was Fields.

It was all dried out and lay in a straight east-erly line with Mount San Antonio, or Mount Baldy, as it is more generally known, in the south-west. The snow-capped peak gave Goler encouragement, and also indicated the proper direction to the little mining town at the foot of the famous mountain. The Indians found relief from many ills in the waters that flowed from the several springs.

It required another day for him to reach this place, and when he did he was completely exhausted and his horse horribly jaded and ready to collapse.

There he rested for two days and fully recovered, and then he showed the treasures that he had collected.

"Why, there is enough of this stuff to lond several wagons when I found it, and I am going to bring in a load as soon as then a month," he assured some of his friends.

He at once set out to fit up a wagon with broad-tired wheels. Horses were hard to get, so a sturdy horses.

The day he set out, a large gathering watched him off and several prospectors followed, hoping to be in on the treasure that he discovered. In a few days they returned, disgusted with the fact that Goler apparently did not know whether he was traveling. In a week or two, which tired out and disgruntled because he had been unable to relocate the spot, they returned to their former waters. Six different times he went in search of the wealth and always returned with the same story—one of reverses and that he could not find it. Finally he gave up the quest.

It is generally conceded that the Goler discovery has been overrated, that it was not nearly so rich in 1886. In 1891 an old and odd character, Hen Moss, who made his home in San Bernardino, started out with a pack outfit and prospected trips. One of his burros wandered away from the other three, and Moss followed it. It was the lost animal with his entire train.

The wandering burro found a canyon and in it water, and in this way led Moss to the discovery of a gold deposit. In a few hours he panned out several ounces of gold. Then he made a second and also found two or three fair-sized nuggets. The discovery went to his head. He left his people like locating stakes and hurried back to San Bernardino to celebrate his great find.

With borrowed capital he fitted up a second trip, and when he left town he might have been mistaken for a millionaire. He had with him Hen Russells. More than half the male inhabitants of San Bernardino followed him, all equipped for a long journey with pack trails or on horse.

Moss lived to harass all of his doubters on them, returned to San Bernardino, but with a small.

"Guess I might as wall take you along," he said one day when his patience had been frazzled to a rag.

This time he proceeded directly to the distant range in the desert, arrive on the ground at once the canyon those who were following him realized that the end of their journey. Moss squirred his horse down the trail and made camp for itself. There were better horses in this group, and once in sight, the trail was forgotten and his saddle not so well filled as others, he was soon left behind.

The stampeded prospectors, filled with lust for gold, had reached their goal, and old Hen Moss was one of the few who arrive on the ground at his discovery.

His staked what proved to be the richest claim of the district, and all organized out. The man all figured that they had come to the old fellow's discovery, and therefore they accepted the district, which was at once organized as the Goler district, located in what is now Kern county, California, about twenty-eight miles north of Mojave, a little mining town on the Southern Pacific.

The creek proved one of the richest ever found in California. Several hundred thousand dollars were taken from a comparatively small area.

ASTORS' TRADE DAYS

Post Stand Century Ago Comes Again to the Family.

Ranchers of the North Platte Valley Are Interested in a Somewhat Curious Chain of Events.

Cheyenne, Wyo.—A little-known romance of the Astor family is being told among the ranchers of the North Platte valley, where the old original John Jacob Astor had a fur-trading post just a century ago.

The first link in the chain was forged by the Astor traders in 1812. The second was created when young William H. Force came to Wyoming thirty years ago and purchased a ranch upon which were the remains of the old Astor trading post. The third link was to do with the time when Kate Delmadge of New York came to visit Force's sister and remained to marry the brother, the courtship taking place around the old trading post. The fourth link was the birth of Ellis Delmadge Force. Other links are the marriage of Madeline Force and John Jacob Astor and the probable return of the old Astor trading post site to the great-grandson of the original Astor, himself bearing the name of the founder of the American family.

A century ago last December seven trappers, headed by W. Price Hunt, who was returning overland from Astoria, Ore., stopped at the North Platte river, built winter quarters and opened a trading post. They all were the lieutenants of John Jacob Astor, and remained so until it was deserted in the spring of 1813. It was not long when the men loaded their furs in canoes made from cottonwood trees and floated down the Platte and Missouri rivers to St. Louis.

Thirty years later Bruce Husband, in charge of Astor affairs in Wyoming, stopped down the river and, on his way past, this time within two miles of the post of 1813. The importance of this post to the Astors can be seen when it is said that the bales of 4,000 buffalo were shipped to St. Louis from this post in a single year. But by 1850 the Astor company had left the old island, and not until a member of the Astor family became director of the Union Pacific railroad did they again, hold an interest in the river and the valley.

Along in 1883 when so many eastern men of wealth were traveling in great western ranches, William H. Force and others bought a big tract of land in the valley of the Laramie River on the breaks. On the tract was the old Astor trading post, now in ruins. Along with Force were the Arbuckles of coffee fame and some others. Western ranchers say the books of the company showed a ownership of 6,000 brood mares. Mr. Force was manager.

Mr. Force has long lived in the east, but he retains ownership of the "E, O," ranch—one of the largest in the west. This ranch probably will some day come into possession of Force's grandson, the posthumous child of John Jacob Astor, who went down in the Titanic. With the ranch will, of course, go the site of the first trading post established by the Astors in the trans-Mississippi country.

GOAT HAS BANKNOTE MEAL

Farmer in French Town Has Animal Killed to Recover $200 It Masticated.

Paris.—A farmer living near Toulouse has just presented to the court of France the fragments of ten $20 notes for payment. They were much mutilated, but the goat which ate a few days ago the farmer, on entering its goat's shelter, placed his coat on the ground. Later he found that the coat had not at his pocketbook and then was quietly eating the contents. He immediately had the goat killed and he recovered the fragments of the notes.

This was a letter received by M. B. Chisholm at 42 Maple street. The recipient of the letter read it again, gave a little gasp of astonishment and then smiled. The address on the envelope was looked at again. There it was, plain as typewriter could make it: "Miss B. Chisholm, 42 Maple Street, Canajoharie, N. Y."

And here is the reply the company received:

"Your letter duly received and promptly burned. Would that all others sent out might meet the same fate. Ashes to ashes & dust should be the firm name on your letter head. I am, very disrespectfully yours, (Miss) Mary B. Chisholm, president of Woman's Christian Temperance union."

COLLEGE MEN SEE SNAKES

Creepy Feeling Comes to Those Who Are Present When Curator Exhibits Reptiles.

New York.—Two hundred members of the University club, Lafayette avenue and South Oxford street, were present at the reception tendered the alumni of Lafayette college, Wisconsin university and the Union and Hobart colleges. President Edward Ward McMahon, in a brief address, extended a cordial welcome to the visiting alumni.

The entertainment provided was an interesting lecture, illustrated by living specimens, delivered by Curator Leo Dimeru, curator of reptiles and amphibians connected with the New York Zoological park. Mr. Dimaru approached his subject, which happened to be "Snakes and Lizards," with all the ease and charm of a man signing an ordinary check. The careless way in which he handled such deadly snakes as the rattler and the water moccasin was enough to make the cold shifts run down the weak back.

He spoke of the reptiles as one would speak of a friend, in terms of warmest affection, and said the snakes were greatly maligned and that some of the attributes accorded the reptiles were the result of popular superstition and were not warranted by the actual facts.

"As a matter of fact," said the speaker, "the snake is not cold and slimy."

After telling of the various species of lizards, the number over 2,500, and snakes that number over 4,000, Curator Dimaru concluded and established a Gila monster, which was not an anaconda, he said, as its marking would paint it.

In quick succession the speaker took his exhibits of snakes and which Head Keeper of the Bronx Zoo Charles Reed assisted, and showed the habits of his keep.

"This snake," said the speaker, "gets its name because, if struck a blow from a walking stick, it would break its back."

Mr. Dimaru then produced an innot box constructed. "There is a certain art in handling snakes," said the speaker as the reptile turned when its eyes. "The snake has an erratic temper and should be allowed to have its own way. Very often it is affected by the nervous condition of the person who handles it. A gate read mad if the handler is not in the right frame of mind to deal with it."

Mr. Dimaru then picked up a milk snake, which, he said, despite the fact that it is a representative of farms, does not milk cows, according to the popular belief, is of economic value to the farmer, because it feeds on mice, which are a pest to the agriculturist.

Loses Mind Over "Black Hand."

Hillsdale, Mich.—Mentally unbalanced from the effects of his experiences in the recent "Black Hand" feud, James A. Robinson was found near his home almost frozen to death. He had escaped from the house in a nightshirt only, and was saved from death by a passerby. Robinson's "Black Hand" feud has was waylaid several times and severely wounded.

X-Ray Shows Organs on Right Side of Breast Bone of Males in Philadelphia.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Following an examination by the X-ray department of the University of Pennsylvania, it was announced that Frederick Seidel, forty-two years old, of 611 Henry street, Camden, was suffering from a displacement of the heart, the organ being four inches to the right of the breast bone.

It was the second case of the kind brought to light in Camden by a doctor, the other being that of Edgar Marvin, thirty-three years old, of 12 Delaney avenue. It was stated that with rest and care a cure can be effected in both cases.

Tarriere Kill Wildcat.

Haywarde, Cal.—In a death battle with three small terrier dogs a thirty-pound wildcat was killed on a ranch in the Valle Vista district. In the act of making a raid on chickens the cat was discovered by a rancher's son and the dogs put at him. He was dislodged with stones, and in the fight which followed one of the terriers was badly torn.

FRISCO OLDER THAN NATION

Pacific Coast City Said to Have Seen Hundred Years.

Berkeley, Cal.—The yellow, musty pages of an old Spanish ecclesiastical document in the possession of the University of California have yielded to...researchers a new story of the founding of San Francisco. Hitherto...deem the date before the birth of the nation—March 27, 1776.

This document is contained in the Bancroft Spanish collection presented to the Academy of Pacific Coast History by the late Collis P. Huntington. It has just been deciphered by Prof. Frederick C. Taggart. The narrative deals with the journey from Sonora, Mexico, of Padre Pedro Font, first apostle to the Indians of San Francisco peninsula. His party founded a mission at Yuma, Ariz., then crossed the Imperial valley of California to San Diego and moved up the coast to San Francisco.

VOTE "YES" ON BONDING PROPOSITION.

No citizen should go to the polls to vote in next Tuesday's special city election entertaining the opinion that the proposition is one to provide in any way for an increase in the city's indebtedness. It is simply proposed to put the evidences of the city's present indebtedness in a different form.

The city now has a large floating indebtedness. This indebtedness is now evidenced by hundreds of city warrants held by many people. These warrants bear interest and must be sold at a discount when negotiated.

It is proposed to issue bonds in an amount sufficient to take up all of the warrants. This certainly is a good business proposition. It will result in an actual saving to the city in money and will simplify the keeping of the city records and will put the city's business on a cash basis. It is, of course, unfortunate that the city has a large floating indebtedness, but to issue and negotiate the bonds as proposed is the most practical way of meeting the situation.

Every citizen in the city will have an opportunity to "do his duty" next Tuesday. Vote for the refunding bonds.

It is probable that when women of England get the vote they'll be so used to the excitement that they will want jobs on the police force.

It is said that New York is to have a circular court house.—Boston Globe. The grafting policemen an opportunity to run each other down, perhaps.

H. E. Ives has sold his St. Hilaire Co-Cator to Burkee & Gossard and the business is now in the possession of the firm with O. Gunstad as editor.

The congressional committee that investigated campaign expenses should have made an effort to learn who is financing the Mexican "revolutionos."

The New York suffragettes who marched in silence might very profitably call their demonstration a protest against the methods of their sisters in England.

As a means of keeping the boys on the farms some well-to-do southern Minnesota farmers are presenting automobiles. While that gives the boys a chance to get away from the farm, they are pretty sure to come back after the spin or when the gasoline is running low.

Now that "money and credits" are to be assessed for taxation there will no doubt be found much bed money and poor credits—not worth mentioning.

Amundsen,who discovered the pole, seems to have a good line of talk and the right kind of bait to catch American dollars. And being a good sport, he's entitled to his catch.

In the month of May a man's family turns to the task of imagining what a very small store of this world's goods he is possessed of and of what little value it really is.

There is little doubt that Friedman who discovered the "cure" has been "discovered". But is was a neat little bunch of free advertising for the patent medicine company.

CO-ADJUTORS' REMARKS.

Minneapolis Journal: The tariff does not bother Governor Eberhart to any considerable extent if President Wilson has his way. Now if they can induces grandpa not to bear down quite so hard——

Moorhead Citizen: Everybody is doing it. Doing what? Why, putting in their applications for the postmastership, even if they have not been good Democrats.

Jordan Independent: In view of the pugilistic activities (within the married halls of the state-house) of certain state officials, it might be well to establish a state athletic commission after all.

Duluth News Tribune: New York city now claims more population than London, 4,833,381 being the estimate, including those in the tombs and those sentenced to Sing Sing and other county resorts

Virginia Virginian: Pierpont Morgan may not have gone to heaven, but no one is going to believe it because a Philadelphia clergyman says so. It isn't on record that any publisher has subpoena communication with St. Peter.

Princeton Union: Having become convinced that Bassett's creek can not be converted into "a safe and tranquil harbor for shipping," Minneapolis should now stock the stream with cod and erect a futefluk factory on its banks.

Preston Times: After July 1 there will be no excuse for anybody not to obtain a man holding up the 11 other jurors in the trial of civil cases in this state. The law recently passed provides that 10 jurors may bring in a verdict. This sounds like good sense.

Little Falls Transcript: It is now dug out from the records of past history that the three great extinct aluns of the United Stae postal department, viz: the rural free delivery service, the postal savings bank and the parcel post system, were each recommended for adoption by John Wanamaker when he was postmaster general under Benjamin Harrison

Hutchinson Leader: The cost of producing advertising space in country newspapers was shown at the last state editorial convention to be from 14½ to 18 cents per column inch. This fact was brought out by a committee of the best country newspaper men in the state appointed for the purpose of determining the cost of advertising space at the convention a year previous. The most complete and exhaustive analysis was made by the committee and the result was arrived at by the application of the best and most scientific cost systems and must be accepted as fairly accurate. From this it is apparent at once that most country newspapers are selling their advertising space at cost or less, and that if they are making any money it must be on some other branch of their business.

Esri Stewart, from near Owatonna, has bought an eighty acre farm in Ottertail county. There is nothing remarkable in this and yet Mr. Steve Art is quite a remarkable man. He has been living on a forty acre farm and on this he kept a herd of forty dairy cows. From these he takes in cash receipts $2,500 besides a good share of its living. He rents 20 acres in field crops and pastures 40 acres in tame grass which he buys more for an out-of-doors resort for his family. He values at his own onstage on this and has more then enough.

Now I keep those cows like insane," says Mr. Stewart. "They are stalled the year around. I carry them no most folks do horses, and cows and cleaner as provided by law to the day such redemption is made.

Studebaker

"Yes Sir! Studebaker wagons are made to back up a reputation."

"I know, because wagons of every make come into my shop for repair, and I have a chance to see how few are Studebakers."

That's the opinion of thousands of blacksmiths who know the quality of Studebaker wagons.

The owners never regretted that they bought Studebakers.

Tested materials, accurate workmanship insure a wagon unequaled for durability, and this careful selection of wood, iron, steel, paint and varnish has been a fixed rule with the Studebaker Company for sixty years. STRUCK BY TRAIN.

Aged Thief River Resident Instantly Killed.

Tolef K Bondelie, an aged resident of this city, was instantly killed by a Soo flyer early last Wednesday morning about five twelve north of the Soo depot. Bondelie, who was seventy years old has been a resident of this vicinity for over thirty years. Previous to the time of his death he had no home but lived with the family of Thomas Moe in this city and with a family by the name of Jepson, a few miles north of town. It is thought that he was attempting to reach the depot house when struck by the flyer at the railroad crossing at 3 o'clock Saturday morning.

Section man on going to work later in the day found the mutilated remains of the old man lying on the right of way and at once notified Dr. Beldemann, coroner of Marshall county. The coroner reached this city late Saturday afternoon and collected the remains. Two more trains had passed since the time of the accident and the body was cut into forty-three separate pieces, making identification almost impossible. After considerable investigation, Enock Bondelie, son of deceased, identified the body as that of his father. The remains were buried at Greenwood after a short funeral service last Tuesday afternoon.—Thief River News Press.

OLD MAN HAD NERVE.

So Had Boy Who Amputated Father's Finger With Knife.

This morning with his finger caught between the cog and chain on a sender which he was trying to fix when the horses moved, drawing the member into the machinery, with bones of the finger crushed and the finger itself badly mangled, J. B. Dupuis living on a farm near Gentilly took out a jackknife and cut a boy who was with him to cut off the member. After some hesitation the boy did so and then Dupuis retired to his home and the old man was summoned.

Mr. Dupuis was seeding out in the field when the machinery got out of order, the horses started to run and chain being out of kilter. He stopped the team and got down to remedy the matter and while working with his hand in the machinery the horses started, injuring his hand in between the cog wheel and the small chain. The bones in the last finger on the left hand were crushed and the member was left hanging by the parts of the machinery. Dupuis being powerless to remove his hand. Seeing his predicament becoming worse every minute he called to his son his jackknife and told a son to cut the member off. At first the boy hesitated but when told a second time he did as commanded.

A physician dressed the painful wound.

The accident was due to careless ness on his part, Mr. Dupuis said. The third finger was badly crushed but no bones were broken. Mr. Dupuis is 71 years old and says this is the first time he was the victim of a serious accident.—Crookston Times, Friday.

SYNOPSIS

Bill Cox, the cowboy king, and his daughter, Rose, who is passing as an Indian Carrollton Ryan's ball at San Francisco to engineer her father, arrive at midnight. Clarence Ryan calls on his mother in bed, a tacit invitation for his wife, and is told by Mrs. Ryan that Rose is the woman he met after her daughter-in-law. Antoinette Ryan's child had been trapped into a marriage with Jack Forrester, an unscrupulous adventurer, who, after squandering Rose's money, they have frequent quarrels, and he often away. Jack and his daughter are snubbed in at Antelope. Dominick Ryan, Clarence's brother, arrives with his invalid wife, Dominick's son by a former letter. Antelope is cut off by storm. Rose becomes nurses Dominick's baby. Two weeks later Dominick discovers in a letter that Antoinette had been untrue to him during his second long absence in the east. Dominick at last is able to join Rose's party around primrose in the snow. Rose's daughter, Rose, is born. Dominick gets letter from wife. To Rose he doesn't love wife, and never did. Disembodied people begin to descend on Rose. Dominick's brother Carroll arrives and demands an explanation. Rose's brother Gene is made manager of ranch, and he is got it if he stays sober a year.

At dinner that evening Gene was very talkative. He told of his life on the ranch, of his methodical management, of its exclusion, for he saw little of his neighbors and seldom went in to the town. Rose listened with eager interest, and the old man looked at with a sidelong attention. At intervals he shot a piercing look at his boy, eying him sidewise with a cogitating intensity of observation. His remarks were few, but Gene was so loquacious that there was little opportunity for another voice to be heard. He prattled on like a happy child, recounting the minutest details of his life after the fashion of those who live much alone.

In the light of the crystal lamp that spread a ruffled shade of yellow silk over the center of the table, he was seen to be quite unlike his father or sister. His jet-black hair and uniformly pale skin resembled his mother's, but his face in its full, rounded contours, slightly turned-up nose, and eyebrows as thick as strips of fur, had a serious here and lacked. Some people thought him good-looking, and there was a sort of unusual, Italian picturesqueness in the combination of his curly black hair, which he wore rising up in a bulwark of waves from his forehead, his white skin, and the small, dark mustache, delicate as an eyebrow, that shaded his upper lip. It was one of his father's grievances against him that he would have made a pretty girl, and that his soft, effeminate character would have been quite charming in a woman. Now, listening to him, it seemed to the older man as if it were just the kind of talk one might expect from Gene. The father had difficulty in suppressing a snort of derision when he heard the young man recounting to Rose his troubles with his Chinese cook.

Before dinner was over Gene excused himself on the plea that he was going to the theater.

"I'm such a harassed now," he said as he rose, "that I don't want to miss a thing. Haven't seen a play for six months and I'm just crazy to see anything, 'Monte Christo,' 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' 'East Lynne.' I'm not particular, anything'll suit me."

"Don't you go over to San Lois?" growled his father sullenly. "They have plays there sometimes, I suppose."

"Oh, yes, but I'm keeping out of harm's way. The boys in San Lois don't understand and I'm not going to put myself in the way of temptation. You know, father, I want this ranch."

He turned a laughing glance on his father; and the old man, with a sheepishly-discomfited expression, grunted an unintelligible reply and bent over his plate.

He did not raise his head till Gene had left the room, when, looking up, he leaned back in his chair and said with a plaintive sigh:

"What a damned fool that boy is!"

Rose was up in arms at once.

"Why, papa, how can you say that! Especially when you see how he's improved. It's wonderful. He's another man. You can tell in a minute he's not been drinking, he takes such an interest in everything and is so full of work and plans."

"Is he?" said her father dryly. "Maybe so, but that don't prevent him from being a damned fool."

"You're unjust to Gene. Why do you think he's a fool?"

"Just because he happens to be one. You might as well ask me why I think the sun rises in the east and sets in the west. That's what it does, and when I say it does I'm not criticizing or complaining, I'm only stating the plain facts."

Rose made a murmur of protest and he went on.

"You're queer cattle, you women. I suppose a fellow could live in the world a hundred years and not understand you. There's Della Ryan, for example, the brainiest woman I know, could give most men cards and spades and beat 'em hands down. Last night at Rocky Bar they were telling me that she's written to the operator there and told him she'll get him a position here in the Atlantic and Pacific Cable Company, in which she's a large stockholder, that'll double his salary and give him a chance he'd never have got in this world. She wants to pay off a mortgage on a ranch Perley has in the Sacramento Valley and she's sent Mrs. Perley a check for five hundred dollars. She's offered Willoughby a first-rate job on the Red Cabinet group of mines near Tonopah in which Con had a controlling interest, and she's written to the doctor to come down and become one of the house physicians of the St. Filomena Hospital, which she practically runs. She's ready to do all this because of what they did for Dominick, and yet she, his own mother, won't give the boy a rent and keeps him on starvation wages, just because she wants to spite his wife."

He looked at his daughter across the table, and narrowed eyes, where a gleam of humor mingled with the sadness of his face, seemed to say to her, "Now, you little woman, you've got to say for yourself after that, young woman!" as he demanded.

Rose bed evidently nothing to say. She raised her eyebrows and shook her head by way of reply. Her face, in the flood of lamplight, looked pale and tired. She was evidently distraught and depressed; a very different-looking Rose from the girl he had ridden away with him four weeks earlier. He regarded her for an anxiously-contemplative moment and then said:

"What's the matter? Seems to me you look sorry-ier pesked."

"It" she queried with a surprised start. "Why, I'm quite well."

"Well's I'm were before you went up to the mines?"

A color came into her cheeks and she lowered her eyes:

"I'm a little tired, I think, and that always makes me look pale. It was such a hard trip, all those hours in the sleigh, and then hotel at Rocky Bar was a dreadful place. I couldn't sleep, and the noise and—and—everything near—it sounded as if it were in the room next—and the waiters all up and down in the middle of the night. It's all right now, papa."

Her father drew his coffee-cup toward him and dropped in a lump of sugar. He went back to the subject of his son and his daughter as to the scene he had witnessed two days before in the parlor of Perley's Hotel. She was ignorant of the fact that he had been told and he intended that she should remain ignorant of it. But the next moment he had had an interview with Dominick Ryan, in which the young man, overcome by anger and something and goaded past reserve by shame and pain, had confessed the misery of his marriage and the love that in an ill-guarded moment had slipped beyond his control.

Cennon had sold little to him. Beyond telling him that he must not see Miss Cennon again, his comments on Dominick's confessions had been brief and non-committal. It was not his business to preach to Dollie Ryan's son any of the sweet platitudes of men had given him a practically limitless tolerance of age and all lapses of which the human animal is capable. They only concerned him as they bore on the love affair. In this particular case they did bear on his affairs, closely and intimately, and a rock of all others dearest and nearest to him was the happiness of his daughter. He knew that in this three weeks of imprisonment she had come to feel for Dominick Ryan a sentiment she had never before felt for any man. He had seen her in the young man's arms, and, knowing Rose as he knew her, that was enough.

Driving down from Antelope in the sleigh he thought about it hard, harder than he had ever before in his life thought of any sentimental complication. It was unusual—mildly and grimly enraged—that his girl should have stumbled into such a difficulty. But it was not his habit to waste time and force in the indulgence of profitless anger. The thing had happened. Rose, who had been courted many times and never warmed to more than pity for her unsuccessful suitors, had surrendered, by a fateful, unpremeditated chance, unto her mate—the man she loved. And the most maddening part of it was that he was the man of all others her father would have chosen for her had such a choice been possible.

Before Dinner Was Over Gene Excused Himself

He bit on his cigar, turning it over between his teeth, and looked sidewise at her as she sat silent in the sleigh beside him. She was unquestionably pale, pale and lifeless, her body wrapped in enveloping furs, and in an attitude of weariness, her eyes full of dejected reveries. Even in his blindly-groping, masculine perceptions her distrait looks, her dispirited silence, told of melancholy preoccupation. She was not happy—his Rose, who, if she had wanted it and he could have bought it, begged or stolen it, would have had the moon.

Tonight, in her white dress, the mellow radiance of the lamp throwing out her figure against the shadowy richness of the dining-room walls, she bore the same appearance of despondency. Her lustre was dimmed, her delicate skin had lost its dazzling, sea-breed bloom of pink and white, her glance was absent and unresponsive. Never, since the death of her mother, had she been such a heavy burden to him when it was so obvious that she bent under some unexpressed weight of trouble.

"I guess the city's the best place for you," he said. "Roughing it don't seem to suit you if cows and chickens and you awake all night. I've seen the time when the hotel at Rocky Bar would have been considered the top notch of luxury. I wish you could see the places your mother lived in when I first took her up here. You're a spoiled girl, Rose Cannon."

"Who spoiled me, I wonder?" she said, looking at him with a gleam of humor in her eye.

"We're not calling names to-night," he answered, "anyway, not since Gene's good. All my desire to throw things and he ugly vanishes when that boy comes in. Do the critters at Rocky Bar kept you awake?"

"Yes, and I was wakeful, anyway."

She looked down at her cup, stirring her coffee. He thought she appeared more sad and forlorn.

"What made you wakeful, guilty conscience?"

"Guilty conscience!" she repeated with a start that was full of frightened surprise. "Why should I have a guilty conscience?"

"Lord knows! Don't fire off these conundrums at me. I don't know all your secrets."

She did not answer. He glanced furtively at her and saw that her face had flushed. She took a cigar from the box the butler had set at his elbow and bit off the end.

"How should I know the secrets of other's young souls, girl? A long time ago, perhaps, I used to, after your mother died and you were my little Rosey, fifteen years old—Lord, how cunning you were then! Just beginning to forget the kid, a little woman and a little girl, both in one. You didn't have secrets in those days or wakeful nights either."

He applied a match to the end of his cigar and drew at it, his eyes strained for his daughter's reply. She again made some and he shot a quick glance at her. She was still stirring her coffee, her eyebrows drawn together, her eyes on the swirl of brown in the cup. He settled himself in his chair in a lulky fashion, his clothes ribbed with creases, his head low between his shoulders, and a rock of cigar smoke issuing from his lips.

"Now! you like it up there, anyway?"

"Up at Antelope. It was a sort of strange, new experience for you."

"Oh, I liked it so much—I loved part of it. I liked the people much better than the people down here. Mrs. Perley, and Cora, and Perley, and Willoughby—did you ever know a nicer man than Willoughby?—and Judge Westhuyse. He was a real gentleman, not only in his manners but down to his heart. And even Perley's bark is worse than his bite, and he's honest. I felt different from what I do here, more myself, less as if not-sleigh bells, and the jingle, and the "How'd you like Dominick Ryan? You haven't said anything about him." Her voice, in answering, sounded low and careful. She spoke slowly, as if considering her words.

"I thought he was very nice, and good-looking, too. He's not a bit like Cornelia Ryan, or his mother, either. Cornelia has such red hair."

"No, indeed, like the old man. Good deal like him in character, too. Con Ryan was the best fellow in the world, but not hard enough—wasn't cut out. His wife bed it though, bad enough for both. If it hadn't been for that, Con would never bave amounted to anything—too soft and good-natured, and the boy's like him."

"How?" She raised her head and looked directly at him, her eyes slightly parted.

"Soft, too, just the same way, softhearted. An easy mark for any one with a hard-luck story and not too easily angered. I'll bet he never thrashed that woman! I don't know anything about it, but I'll bet he let her say the stuff he was made of and cried and teased and nagged till she got him to do it."

"I don't see that he could have done anything else."

"That's a woman's—a young girl's view. They're new Dominick has got self probably took. It's the sort of idea he might expect him to have, something dramatic and impractical, that's all right to keep in the cupboard and take out and look at, but that don't do for every-day use. That sort of thing is all very well for a girl, but it doesn't do for a man. It's not the way to get on in this world. Dominick was all right when a fuller went round in armor, fighting for unknown damsels, but he's not the boy for now-to-day. The women were a working bee, you know, and got everything. She earned her living in an office full of men, and I guess there wasn't much she didn't know. She saw through Dominick and gathered him in. He was a soft mark, a big, generous, but you don't want to be a consistent."

"Are you a 'confounded fool' when you're doing what you think right?"

"It depends on what you think right, honey. If it's going to break up your life, you are a confounded fool, and I'm an outcast if you from your own point of view, and consequently from at that, you're a confounded fool in that life's right. You oughtn't to let yourself think you're a martyr. That moral attitude is a luxury. Women can afford it, but men can't. We've got to get out in the world and fight, and bump against the hard corners of it, and the queer ideas they have don't hurt anybody. But men—"

She interrupted, and perhaps he was talking too frankly. He had long been used to talking to Rose those Utopian theories on duty and honor, which had been the creed of his mother, for her and which went gracefully with her character as a sheltered, sheltered, and unworldly child. It was his desire to see what effect the conversation was having on her, and he made him deal so unnecessarily hard blows at conduct which was very well for Bill Cannon's daughter but were ruinous for Dominick Ryan.

"If you don't like the world you've got to cut your cloth by its measure," he continued. "Look at that poor devil, tied to a woman that's not going to let him go if she can help it, that he doesn't care for—"

"How do you know he doesn't care for her?" She spoke with a tone of startled surprise and Rose stared at his face, her eyes wide.

For a moment the old man was at a loss. He knew how to love and say its rather than have, let her guess his knowledge of the situation and the intimate relations of Dominick and Dollie, he realized that he soil had made him suspect something serious, and looking at her with a slightly stupid expression, said in a low tone of self-justification:

"Well, that's my idea. I guessed it. I've heard one thing and another here and there and I've come to the conclusion that there's no love lost between them. It's the natural outcome of the situation, anyway."

"Yes, perhaps," she murmured. She placed her elbow on the table and pressed the tips of her fingers against her cheek. Her hand and arm, revealed by the loose lace sleeve, looked as if cut out of ivory.

"And then," went on her father remorselessly, "the results of being a confounded fool don't stop right there. That's one of the things we're all following yourself the luxury of foolishness. They go on—roll right along like a wheel started on a down-hill track, and they don't stop till—He's a good husband lost for some nice girl."

Rose's hand dropped and she turned her forehead. Her hand rested there, shading her eyes. For a moment the old man's heart beat tumultuously, for the half-understood wretchedness of Dominick Ryan's position—forgot her, and he said in a hushed voice of feeling:

"By God, I'm sorry for the poor boy!"

His daughter rose suddenly with a rustling of crushed silks. The sound brought him back to himself, and he leaned over the arm of his chair, his cigar in his hand, his right eye closing the smoke wreaths from before his face. Rose's hand, pressing her crumpled napkin on the table, shone pink in the lamplight, her shoulder gleamed white through its lace covering, but her face was averted.

"Going up now?" he asked, leaning still farther over the chair-arm to see her beyond the lamp's wide shade.

She appeared not to hear and moved toward the door.

"Going to bed already, Rosey?" he asked in a louder key.

"Yes, I'm tired," her voice came a little hoarse and she did not look at him. At the doorway she stopped, her hand on the edge of the portiere, and without turning, cleared her throat and said: "The cow and the chickens were too much for me. I'm too sleepy to talk any more. Good night, papa."

"Good night, Rosey," he answered.

The portiere fell softly behind her, and the swishing of her dress to the noses of the carpets. Though he had not seen her face, her father had an alarming, and almost terrifying idea, that his darling had left the table in tears.

He sat on for some time, stonily motionless, save for the movement of his lips as he puffed out clouds of smoke. The scene seemed to be coming to clear the table, fed before his growled command to "get out and let me alone." As he scowled he looked straight before him with fixed, unwinking eyes, his face knit in furrows of thought. At long intervals he stirred in his chair, pondercously, like an inert, heavy animal, and now and then he emitted a short grunt. The scattered sentences that came thought, which, by its biting suddenness, seemed to force an objectation out of him.

CHAPTER X.

Dominick Comes Home.

Three days after the return of the Cannon party, Dominick Ryan also came home. He had answered Benry's letter the day the Cannons left, a few hours after the latter had left for Sonnana. King, in which, driven to it by the old man's questions, he had torn the veil from his married life.

After that there was a period of several hours when he sat in his room thinking over what had happened. It seemed to him that he had played a dreadfully part. He saw himself in the creature of monumental, gross selfishness. He had been living with a girl in a moment of softness and sentiment, into an action which had done nothing but distress and humiliate her. He, who should have been the strong one, had been weak. It was he who should have seen how things were going; he, the married man, who had allowed himself to feel and to yield to a love that ought to have been hidden forever in his own heart.

He felt that it would be a sort of expiation to go back to his wife. That was where he belonged. Rose must never again cross his path, have a room in his house, become one of the beguiling images, in his memory. He had to go to his wife. No matter what she was, she was the woman he had married. She had not deceived him. She had not done her e wrong, and he owed her e reperation.

In these six hours his nerves still thrilling with the memory of that moment in the sunroom, he saw Benry from her own point of view. He lost the memory of the complacent mistress of the picture of the unloved wife, on whose side there was much to be said. Motherhood with a fretful child, an ill-favored and ailing baby, and aggravated by the treatment she had received from her husband, might have been quite a different attitude toward her, the wife of a young man who had been quite a pleasant, easy-going person. In all other ways she had been a good wife. Since their marriage, no other man or woman, a glance from whom he had ever caught aroused Dominick to that feeling, and he could not say which they can have a liberal hand as to providing. He was the owner of Johnnie wants to catch the fish, and if Johnnie wants to dig the clams, or at least picking them up as father digs them they are worth.—Atlantic Constitution.

GIPSIES OF SPAIN

Odd People Who Live in Caves Built in Sides of Mountains.

They Neither Work Nor Pay Rent, but Part of the Year They Wander a Little—Antiques to Tourists.

Granada, Spain.—They are too wise to pay rent. These Spanish gipsies I speak of live in caves in the sides of mountains that tower above Granada, in Andalusia, where the sun shines as it really ought to shine. They have been there a long time, says a correspondent. They were there before the Moors. They were there in the times of the Romans. Their ancestors saw the steam from the swords of Roman soldiers as they marched along the valley beneath them.

They are delightful people, who neither work nor pay rent. At a certain season of the year they wander a bit—just to feel that they really are gipsies—and then they come back again to their caves to tell the fortunes of visiting innocent tourists and to sell the molecule of immenses antiquity that have been made in Granada but a few days or weeks before.

These caves where they live form, in fact, the old city of Granada. It is called the Albaicin. It practically adjoins Granada, but it is a world of difference, and making her feel contemptible. She knew that she was crushed because he was coming home. Once there, she would sit at the head of his work, use every art of which she was capable to make him forget his first quarrel and enter in upon a new era of sweet reasonableness and mutual consideration.

She set about this by cleaning the house and buying new curtains for the sitting-room. Such purifications and garnishments as she had previously impressed her on a home-coming and she thought they would Dominick. In the past year she had become much more extravagant than she had been formerly, a characteristic which had arisen in her from a state of reaped for I never saw a good looking gipsy woman in the Albaicin, and I was there several times.

The men, however, were fine, villainous looking fellows. They generally were the air of an old and innocent cutthroats and highway robbers. They looked at once lazy and agile and powerful. There was savagery and destructive, and their eyes were fierce. They seemed to have very much the physical and mental make-up of the Spanish gentleman who, in more interesting times, used to send the ears of captives to their friends, so as to stimulate them to the ransom.

It is now that some of them now and then went in for fathering grist in the time-honored manner. I must relate an incident that was told to me by the English consul in Granada. It seems that a year or so ago a gipsy of a particularly engaging personality persuaded an Englishman to hire him as a guide. This gipsy could speak good English with fluency, and he went with the Englishman in the capacity of monitor and general guide, philosopher and friend. He undertook to him the wonders of the Alhambra, and the Englishman should him all the money had on him, and his watch and chain. But the other Englishman impolitely refused the gipsy's request. The gipsy then made a quick move for his knife, but the Englishman was quicker. He whipped out a revolver and shot the gipsy dead. Than he gave himself up to the police in Granada. But the police did nothing, save to express their regrets.

MINNESOTA STATE SECRET

TO DRAFT NEW BILL

SENATORS CHOSEN TO DRAW A COMPREHENSIVE UTILITIES COMMISSION MEASURE.

IS EXTRA SESSION BUSINESS

Will Be Urged for Passage Then—Five of Seven Named Voted to Pass Bills Over Governor's Vetoes.

St. Paul.—Seven senators who will attempt to draw up a public utilities commission bill for passage at the extra session of the legislature, or the next regular session, have just been appointed by Lieutenant Governor J. A. A. Burnquist, who also gave out a statement discussing frankly his reasons for predicting that the committee will frame o bill fair to all. The committee follows:

Senator J. M. Hackney, St. Paul, chairman; Senator W. S. Dwinnell, Minneapolis; Senator H. W. Cheadle, Duluth; Senator George H. Sullivan, Stillwater; Senator Julius A. Coller, Shakopee; Senator F. E. Putnam, Blue Earth; Senator Ole O. Sageng, Dalton.

Hardly Satisfactory.

The committee will hardly be more satisfactory to Governor A. O. Eberhart and his friends than the one named by Speaker Henry Rines to investigate the same subject for the house. Five of the seven members of the senate committee voted to pass the Nolan bill over the governor's veto, and five also voted to pass the Minnette bill over the veto. Senators Hackney, Dwinnell, Cheadle and Sageng voted to overturn both vetoes. Senator Sullivan voted against both bills at every stage. Senator Putnam voted "aye" on the Minnette bill and "no" on the Nolan bill, while Senator Coller voted "no" on the Minnette bill and "aye" on the Nolan bill. Senator Dalinsell had charge of the Nolan bill in the senate.

Three of Resolution Movers Chosen.

The lieutenant governor took only three senators from the list of seven who stood sponsors for the resolution asking that the committee be appointed. The resolution was moved for adoption last Wednesday by Senator G. H. Sullivan, but bore also the names of A. J. Rockne, Albert Schaller, Frank Murray, F. E. Putnam, Julius A. Coller and John Mooonn.

PROMINENT ATTORNEY DIES

John D. O'Brien, St. Paul, Succumbs Very Suddenly at Snelling.

St. Paul.—John D. O'Brien, of St. Paul, one of the most eminent attorneys in Minnesota, died suddenly Sunday at 5 p. m. at Fort Snelling, of acute dilation of the heart.

No one who knew him was with him at the time of the attack, which brought death almost instantly. He had left his home, 1 Crocus hill, early in the afternoon, seeming to be in the best of health, saying that it was an ideal day for a ride on the river in his motor boat. The first word the family had after that was a telephone message from the hospital at Fort Snelling, saying that Mr. O'Brien had just died. It is supposed that he came up in the river in the motor boat and then climbed the hill to Fort Snelling. Strangers who were near when he collapsed called for aid and Lieutenant O. H. Quade, assistant surgeon, arrived just before he expired.

Mr. O'Brien was 60 years old and a native of Dublin, Ireland, coming to America with his father in 1856. They lived from 1856 to 1861 at St. Anthony, now part of Minneapolis, then lived a while in Meeker county later taking up a permanent residence in St. Paul, where Mr. O'Brien studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1874. He has occupied a prominent position for the last quarter of a century.

Winona Stores Robbed.

Winona.—Burglars have been unusually active in Winona, having entered several establishments, the largest haul having been made at the store of McNiz & Co., where $1,000 is said to have been taken. Other stores to break into the store of the O. P. Soodag company, but the door to the door was unusually thick and effective to cut through it proved marvelling, the patrolman on his rounds possibly having frightened away the men before they had secured their attempt. The police have several clues upon which they are working.

$3,000 Fire at Bagley, Minn.

Bagley, Minn., April 24.—Fire at Bagley Saturday destroyed the hardware and machine hall of A. J. Sigdem, the blacksmith shop of Wm. Pool, the Bagley Wholesale Supply company's store, H. P. Sorenson's store, Otto Nels Hagen's office, William A. McGlennon's office, the Clover Telephone company's central exchange and the Clearwater County State bank. The total loss is about $20,000, partly covered by insurance. The origin of the fire is unknown.

MINNESOTA LOSES ORE CASE

STATE CANNOT CLAIM THAT LYING UNDER PUBLIC WATERS.

Concludes Action Against Mining Companies at Longyear Lake.

Duluth, April 28.—That the state of Minnesota cannot claim mining rights in bodies of ore lying under public waters is the effect of a decision just handed down in district court by Judge William A. Cant.

The court's decision disposes of a test case brought in district court in 1909 by the state against the White Lake Mining company, the Euclid Iron Mining company and the heirs of lot 5, section 21, 58-21, Minnesota.

The state asked for an order permanently restraining the mining companies from interfering with the public waters of Longyear Lake, on which the mining tract bordered, and from removing from from under the lake or any part which would naturally be covered with water, and further wanted an accounting of ore which was claimed to have been unlawfully removed prior to and pending the action. The court has refused to grant the injunction or grant the accounting.

The gist of the action in order that the beds of public waters be open has no proprietory right or title. Such right or title, as it may exist, is vested in the shore owner or his grantee.

"Any mining or other operations which threaten to interfere in any substantial degree with such waters or with the public use thereof, may be enjoined at the suit of the state.

"No such interference is shown to this case and therefore the action fail."

Watersville Breeders of Shorthorns Buy from Gladfelter and Timpane Herds.

Watersville.—Watersville's reputation for fine shorthorn cattle is becoming widely known and the sales barns on the stock farms of C. W. Glotfelter, of John A. Timpane and other local breeders are an attraction to breeders of the northwest. Representatives of the Community Shorthorn Breeders association of Pope county were here the week from Saturday and bought several head of animals from the Glotfelter and Timpane herds. Many have been shipped recently to other Minnesota points and to town.

Watersville is to have a Chautauqua from June 14 to 18, inclusive. The local guarantors have selected the following, who will have charge of the arrangements: C. W. Glotfelter, president; C. A. Lumber Companies Change Hands.

Bemidji.—Rumors that the Crookston Lumber company is to take over the Bemidji Lumber company in a deal in which will call for the exchange of property worth close to $1,000,000 were confirmed today by W. A. Gould of the Bemidji Lumber company. The Bemidji Lumber company's mill in Bemidji is worth between $125,000 and $150,000. The company is said in owning about 1,000,000 feet of timber and the deed will call for about $1,000,000. The two Wintons, who own a majority of the Crookston stock, were in the city last week conferring with their men.

REPORT ON HEETER'S PAST

SEVEN PROMINENT CITIZENS HAVE BEEN INVESTIGATING.

Pittsburg Children Must Return to Studies or Parents May Be Prosecuted.

Pittsburg, April 25.—Although a majority of the school children of the city remained away from their studies Wednesday, there were few demonstrations in the strike leaga vented on Monday against the retention of S. L. Heeter as superintendent of public schools. Attempts of the children to gather in front of the various school buildings were discouraged by the police reserves.

An answer is expected from each of the seven prominent citizens who have been asked by the board of education to investigate alleged charges of immorality against Superintendent Heeter.

The superintendent, who was acquitted last Friday in criminal court of two charges made by a maid employed at his home, continues his duties at head of the school system. Wednesday he conferred with Director Charles Melnder, jr., of the department of compulsory education, and beginning today all children reporting away from school will be handled not as strikers, but as truants. Several score of truant officers began serving notices at the homes of the children, and parents may be prosecuted in the event the strikers are not in attendance at once.

NEW WHEAT IS ABOVE GROUND

Fields Are Green With Start of Crop From Minnesota to Mexico.

Minneapolis—Draws out by ideal germinating weather, wheat broke through the ground all over the northwest in countless millions. Acres of little green shoots, strong as nails and straight as soldiers, are blanketing the fields from Minneapolis to the Mexican line. Warmed by the sun and abundantly nourished by the recent rains, the crop is up where early seeding was done.

From Redfield, Gettysburg, Doland and Groton, S. D., come reports of fields green with the infant wheat, all through Minnesota west from Winona, the color is deepening, while from the slong the Omaha, Great Western and Minneapolis & St. Louis roads are verdant, and shoots are two inches high in places.

North Dakota, where some seeding must still be done, has the crop showing above ground where the work was done early.

Lyon County Approves Road.

Marshall.—That portion of the Chicago, Black Hills and Lawrence Park highway passing through Lyon county, has just been approved by the county commissioners. Many applications for new roads were submitted and the board finally agreed to the petition to town roads, one running from Minneota to Trout's way of Ghent, Marshall and Amiret; one from Cottonwood to Florence by way of Green Valley, Russell and Lynd, and one from Tracy through Lucan, Minneota and Baloton. These were designated to receive immediate attention as they will benefit the most people. Remaining counties will act this week. Brown county has also taken favorable action and the road will probably be built under the Elwell act.

Pretty Hat for Child Has Braid Brim of Sapphire Blue

For little misses from nine to fourteen years old a great number of shapes to choose from have been provided. New fabrics and new colorings furnish, too, opportunities for unusual millinery for children. It is a season of gay colors and odd fabrics.

Rattina in silk has been employed with fine results in hats for misses. Soft weaves of this material are combined with milk-covered brims. A hat of this sort looks best trimmed with ribbon.

Another sort of crown with a braid brim is shown in this picture. This is an unusually pretty hat with braid brim of sapphire blue. The crown is covered with silk over which is stretched a flowered chiffon showing the patent of gray grounds covered with the brighest of flower forms.

Ribbon is here the most appropriate trim and is placed about the base of the crown in a plain folded band. Four loops, wired to hold them in place, protrude at the back. The frame shows a graceful irregular brim and well balanced round crown. The little hat is constructed to follow out the most up-to-date ideas as to outline, material and colors.

JULIA BOTTOMLEY.

BEAUTIFUL EVENING GOWN

An evening gown of black satin and gold embroidered lace over grenadilla silk. The waist ends in a pointed back panel.

Trimmings From Chinese Skirts.

Chinese skirts in the original certainly possess as many varied uses as the famous parker, whose only loss is its squeal. The front and back panels, with their rich embroideries in Peking stitch, make exceedingly handsome collars which will miraculously turn your most commonplace frock into a veritable creation. The yards on yards of two-toned Chinese blue embroidery bandings make trimmings galore for a stunning gown and hat. A striking panel in these days of unique uses, is made from the skirt's pleated and embroidered plaits, and an equally effective piano lamp shade can be evolved from the same, with the addition of the panels.

Influence of East on New Clothes.

The Chinese coat, a short, straight affair, with unusually bulging sleeves, is another example of the influence of the east upon present-day fashions. Boleros are talked of for fine piece garments, but somehow with the Orient effect the bolero does not seem in keeping. However, as change is what is aimed at, we shall see these introduced again, more in the Spanish style and trimmed a la toreador. As a material for making up this mode the matador hat will again be seen.

Irish Crochet in Colors.

The new Irish crochet, printed in colors, strongly resembles the Bulgarian designs. Bands of this trimming are used as a bordering on thin crepes and voiles. Colored voiles, such as cheesecloths, pale gray, rose pink, etc., are trimmed with bands of all-white Irish crochet, while all white voiles and crepons are trimmed with the Irish crochet in color.

ADORNING THE GUEST ROOM

Particularly Effective Touches May Be Given to Draperies, Especially If They Are of Cretonne.

If you have cretonne draperies in your guest room there are many attractive articles you can make to add comfort and beauty to the room.

Purchase cretonne to match, or, if this is impossible, a design showing the same coloring.

Lovely luncheon scarfs are fashioned by cutting the cretonne the exact dimensions of the luncheon top. Cover this with white marquisette and between the top and the china silk lining place one thickness of cotton wadding. Whipstitch the edges together and finish them with a narrow edging of gold lace.

The marquisette softens the colors of the cretonne, producing a pastel effect.

A rectangular, sofa cushion can be made of the same materials, and is particularly attractive when ornamented with a large flat bow of ribbon in one corner.

In rose designs the cretonne is extremely artistic when veiled with marquisette.

For the dressing table a long pin cushion should be made to match. Finish either end with a rosette of satin ribbon.

Frames for sewing stands can be purchased to match any wood, and it would be nice to have a dainty sewing room with one with a cretonne top to match the draperies.

Cover the cretonne with the marquisette, and fine it with china silk. Either lace or ribbon may be used to frame and finish each corner with a bow of ribbon. This is especially true-like from the frame and holds all the pieces together for mending. This is a very useful article, and the less opulented guest room should be supplied with sewing stand.

Fashionable Colors.

This is the time of year when cut one change, just as do hats sad gowns. Court blue is one of the latest. It is a cross between electric and gendarme.

Taupe has shed its brown tinge and has acquired the tint like elephant gray.

One of the prettiest blues is ibis wig, a deep and yet bright shade.

Copen is the favored green.

A glorious red which looks extremely well with white is called rouge Venetian.

Chalk white is an vogue.

Cafe au lait is a good shade.

Caramel is another pretty edition of brown.

Verdegris is one of the smartest greens.

Mimosa is a yellow that verges on orange.

Fuscia is the successor of the fuchsia medley, with the purple and red tints predominating.

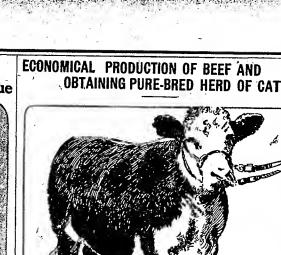
Heels Very High.

In the booth of France, at fashionable Monte Carlo, Cannes and Nice, one sees the most extraordinary shoes which are the direct result of high heels combined with tight skirts. How some of the votaries of this sad sartorial gamation manage to walk at all, it is difficult to say. The heel alone is only a feeble and unsafe totter, for the Louis heel, when exaggerated high, throws the body forward and suggests the balance of it. Yet the heel is the same in bending to the foot and is the smart woman's choice.

Protecting Jewelry.

It is well to wear jewelry with a thin coat of collodion when storing it in the safety depcait vault. The collodion can be dissolved with alcohol or ether when the jewelry is brought forth again. Jewelry of almost every description can be thoroughly cleaned with soap and water. It should then be packed in borrowed rawdust for several hours until it is dry in every crevice.

ECONOMICAL PRODUCTION OF BEEF AND OBTAINING PURE-BRED HERD OF CATTLE



Prize Yearling Hereford Steer.

A bulletin entitled "Economical Beef Production," by H. R. Smith, has just been issued by the Nebraska experiment station. This report gives the results of four experiments in which comparisons are made of different rations suitable for producing beef in Nebraska and of different types and breeds of cattle fed under like conditions. The general conclusions are as follows:

In comparing bran, linseed-meal, and cold pressed cotton seed cake each as a source of protein supplementing cornmeal and silage, the cold pressed cake proved to be worth 50 per cent more per ton than wheat bran, and linseed meal 18 per cent more per ton than cold pressed cotton seed cake.

In the use of each of these supplementary protein feeds with cornmeal and prairie hay, the cold pressed cotton seed cake showed a saving per cent and 22 per cent, greater than wheat bran, and the linseed meal 28 per cent. more than the cotton seed cake.

Where alfalfa was used in connection with cornmeal and silage, for cornmeal and prairie hay, large gains were made without the use of a concentrated protein food. The gains in both experiments where alfalfa was fed were larger, less costly and much more profitable. These experiments, supplementing what had previously been found, show that beef can be produced in Nebraska at a lower cost and with greater profit on a combination of the corn plant and alfalfa hay than on any other combination of foods available in the state.

These experiments show that Wahpatitch the edges together and finish them with a narrow edging of gold lace.

The marquisette softens the colors of the cretonne, producing a pastel effect.

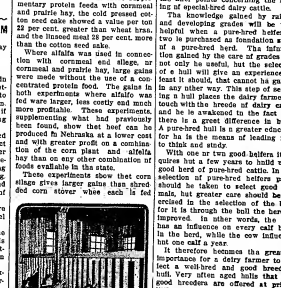
A rectangular, sofa cushion can be made of the same materials, and is particularly attractive when ornamented with a large flat bow of ribbon in one corner.

In rose designs the cretonne is extremely artistic when veiled with marquisette.

For the dressing table a long pin cushion should be made to match. Finish either end with a rosette of satin ribbon.

Frames for sewing stands can be purchased to match any wood, and it would be nice to have a dainty sewing room with one with a cretonne top to match the draperies.

Cover the cretonne with the marquisette, and fine it with china silk. Either lace or ribbon may be used to frame and finish each corner with a bow of ribbon. This is especially true-like from the frame and holds all the pieces together for mending. This is a very useful article, and the less opulented guest room should be supplied with sewing stand.



Modern Stanchions for Calves.

with cornmeal and alfalfa, and for feed production from 60 per cent more per ton.

Corn chop has a value 80 per cent as great is prairie hay, and kafir corn chop is nearly a ration consisting of a heavy feed of cornmeal, alfalfa and silage. A ration consisting of a heavy feed of cornmeal, alfalfa and silage and alfalfa without grain, the cost of producing beef is approximately the amount of cornmeal fed.

These experiments show that there is a great variation in the capacity of individual steers to make gains from the same ration. The data do not show that the individuals of one breed make larger gains than those of another breed. The variation in gain seems to be fully as great within a breed as between representatives of different breeds.

Type or conformation seems to be a controlling factor, the tow-sect more compact types having something of an advantage in gains and early maturity over the rangy type.

Gains seem to correlate to a considerable degree with body capacity as indicated by the size of the middle girth, the largest gainers have relatively larger middle girths at the same weight in most instances.

While the average gains made by all dairy breed steers are nearly the same as those made by the beef breed steers up to the age of twenty-three months, the latter showed in most instances a higher condition of flesh, a larger proportion of high-priced meat, and sold for a higher price per hundred, returning larger profits to the feeder on the basis of the same initial cost per hundred.

It does not require a lot of capital to become a breeder of pure-bred cattle, provided a person can be satisfied to grow in the business rather than go into it. The first thing to decide is what breed meets a person's tastes and conditions best. When this point is settled, save the Southwestern Stockman, then a full of good breeding should be selected and bred to the best, and calves raised from best cows. The raising of grade calves will give the owner a wider experience and help him to understand some of the finer points concerning the rearing of specialbred dairy cattle.

The knowledge gained by raising and developing grades will be very helpful when a pure-bred heifer or cow is procured as foundation stock of a pure-bred herd. The information gained by the care of grades will not only be useful, but the selection of a bull will give an experience, at least it should, that cannot be gained in any other way. This step of selecting a bull places the dairy farmer to work with the breeds of dairy cattle and he is awakened to the fact that there is a great difference in bulls. A pure-bred bull is a greater educator for he is the means of leading men to think and study.

With one or two good heifers it requires but a few years to build up a good herd of pure-bred cattle. In the selection of pure-bred heifers greater should be taken to select good animals, but greater care should be exercised in the selection of the bull, for it is through the bull the herd is improved. In other words, the bull has an influence on every calf born in the herd, even while the cow influence but one calf a year.

It therefore becomes the greatest importance for a dairy farmer to select a well-bred and good breeding bull. Very often good bulls that are good breeders are offered at prices little above their value for beef. They are harder and more expensive to handle than a yearling, but this should not prevent a farmer from purchasing the aged bull, especially if he has pleased a grower of good stock. The bull must prove his worth as a breeder of good stock just as the cow must prove her worth as a producer of milk or butter fat.

To summaries briefly, the steps to be taken by a dairy farmer who desires to become a breeder of pure-bred cattle: First, select the breed that is preferred and meets conditions most nearly. Second, the best bull, and when possible one that has proven himself a breeder of good stock. Third, when finances and experience will permit, buy a pure-bred heifer or cow, and from these animals grow into pure-breds.

Agriculture a Science.

Agriculture has become a science, and no unscientific methods can succeed in these days of close competition. New discoveries are constantly being made, and the modern farmer must be up with the times if he wants to succeed. There is no better way in which he can keep up with the times than by reading current agricultural literature.

Don't Worry Sheep.

Sometimes sheep are so fearful of dogs that they will start up and run the moment a man or other object comes among them. The best dog for sheep that is as worried as this, ever can do well. The worry thought of being chased takes away from their usefulness and sooner or later it will ruin the bird.

Salt for Cows.

When cows are salted only once a week, they eat too much salt at one time, and it causes looseness of the bowels. They will eat a little salt nearly every day if it is kept where they can get at it, especially when the grass is fresh and succulent.

Cow Must Have Feed.

It is wrong to expect the cow to yield a large supply of milk simply because she is well bred. She must have feed and care or the breeding will amount to nothing.

Avoid Mosquitoes.

Don't have any stagnant water about the place or you will have more mosquitoes than is pleasant or profitable. The rain-water barrel, if unscreened, will often act as a mosquito hatchery. A little coal-oil thrown on the water once a week will prevent hatching.

Individual Merit in Breeding.

No animal, however well bred, should be used for breeding purposes unless it possesses individual merit.

Good Dog Invaluable.

A good, well-trained dog is invaluable to the farm. A yapping, worthless cur will run more milk out of the cows between the pasture and the barn than you get into them through the feed trough.

Have a Garden.

Everybody who has a few yards or more of garden should endeavor to raise something, even if it amounts only to a few flowers or a handful of lettuce and radishes.

E. G. Rose, manager of the Red Lake Falls Cement Road, was at Thief River Wednesday and closed a contract for the services of the local band for the state firemen's convention to be held at Thief River Falls June 10 and 11. Manager Rose has contracted for a band that will get him for a week, though. They absolutely immune now. Every body there is selling land and boosting for the country. Two carloads of hatchabout at every turn and advised that he has just arrived in the neighborhood. Every one of the other man you meet exploiting something, but the railroads are doing it and the government is doing it. The railroads have millions of acres of land and they are building towns and cities to create a demand for the land. The government backs up the railroads with the most stupendous line of advertising and the small fry and curb stone dealers never sleep. Everybody has a townsite or a piece of open prairie that is to be a manufacturing center in just a few weeks when several imaginary railway lines strike it and people are induced to buy at fictitious prices. Thousands fall by the strong talk, for it must be so because everybody is talking that way. But it happens, of course, that most everybody is some kind of an exploiter. If you want to be cured of the fever, "Buck" says, just stick around for a while. It's nearly all gone in a week and in much less time than a month you are wondering how it is possible to keep so many people excited all the time.But new people are coming in in trainloads and they get the "fever"—decide to buy again. But it is now true that trains coming this way are not so heavily loaded. "Buck" says he had a most interesting time watching the game played and he got wise to many things. Money is actually tight in the Canadian cities —except the money of the boomers, and there are enough of them to keep up the show. A corner lot that is being marketed at ten thousand dollars will carry a loan of about one thousand dollars. If you have a thousand dollars you can buy a thousand dollars worth of lot and no more. It looks as if the bankers expect that something is going to hit bottom. "Buck" talked with people who had bought quarter sections, or had harvested of the "promised land." The honest opinion of these people is that the soil is first-class, but the climatic conditions so uncertain as to make farming a "hazardous occupation" and decidedly nervewrecking. If one gets a crop this a good one, but for the one crop he gets the frost is sure to get three out four. They country is still unsettled and undeveloped and one may travel hundreds of miles of the most prairie country and everywhere find it the same—a few widely scattered shacks. There is little doubt that the Canadian northwest is approaching the time when there is to be a reaction from the "boom", which has been a most extraordinary boom, and that for the next few years it will be a very fine country to stay away from.

SCHOOL PROGRAM

Pupils of St. Joseph's School at Lotus Theatre Next Friday Evening.

On Friday evening of next week May 15, the pupils of St. Joseph's school will give a program at the Lotus theatre. There will be a drama in one act, "Maid in Order", and many other interesting numbers on the program. The program will be published in full in the next issue of the Gazette.

CURTIS GOT MATCH

But Sutor Proved Able Adversary in Wrestling Match.

That Loren Curtis, the Halsted wrestler,is in the championship class followers of the mat game can no longer doubt. He takes all of them as in his stride and they all go down. He has made quick work of Sailor Jack of Duluth on several occasions and he has "got" Jimmie Potts and others of equal ability.

Probably the cleverest man that he has met Curtis in the person of Chicago who met the Halsted grappler in a match at the Lotus theatre last Thursday night.

Though Curtis was the aggressor, Sutor proved a clever defensive game. After twenty-five minutes of wrestling Curtis gained Sutor's shoulders to the mat, but Sutor obtained that the fall had been secured only by the harvest strangle hold. After fifteen minutes of wrestling Curtis agreed to call it no fall, but after only five minutes more he got his man to the floor the first fall with the hammerlock and repeated the trick in the other five minutes.

After the match Curtis announced thatSutor was the ablest man he had met in two years of wrestling in the northwest.

BIG INCREASE IN AID FOR SCHOOLS.

terested ones.sat and saw the laws in question introduced, debated and finally passed. No effort was made to interfere. For instance, there is the dog slaughter bill. It is so drastic that it can never be enforced. In the case of child labor there are three conflicting acts. The statement bill designed to help the internal revenue folks as if it could never be enforced after the federal courts get through with it. And so it is all down the line—a jumble, many of them blindly repetitious of what are already on the books and others that work a hardship instead of give relief. If this state aid to schools keeps up it might be well to provide a course of study for voters.

Ambitions house and senate members with an eye to future political preference in the shape of executive jobs have come into their own this glimmering in the passage of the house salary bill during the final appeal of all the heads of state departments, but the fact does not worry Speaker Rines of the house of representatives. Mr. Rines, you have probably learned, has his eye on the state auditor's office. According to the constitutional provision the speaker of the house can aspire to any of the executive offices after he has been successfully reelected, until a year after the expiration of his term as a member of the legislature. Author Norman Rines was given a flat salary of $4,500 a year, which was his stipend before, though his actual salary was only $2,500. Rines thinks the word "emolument" is the same thing. J. T. Johnson, a house member from Vergas, Otter Tail county, who hopes for a become secretary of state, but he's undoubtedly out of the running. The office was raised to $4,500.

JAPAN GOING TO FILE PROTEST

Secretary Bryan Will Be Asked to Withdraw Bill.

Courts Will Be Asked.

Effects of Suffragettes to Get Hearing in London General.

London, May 6.—Still another militant outrage occurred at the demonstration in Trafalgar Square under the auspices of the Free Speech Defense committee. Before the police could prevent the speech from the Whitehall side of the plinth of the Nelson column and after the speeches of Japan Peter Herdic Socialist and independent labor member of the house of commons, who was chairman of the meeting, prevented a serious riot.

As it was, the "disorderly, many times culminating in" fisticuffs, between the crowd and the police, lasted for almost two hours.

By the time the marching Socialist, labor and other organizations, with bands playing the Marseillaise, reached Trafalgar Square, 20,000 persons had entered there and as many more were in the streets.

Permission to hold a meeting was given at the last moment on the understanding that no inflammatory speeches be allowed to speak. Unable to obtain permission to march as an organization, the supporters of the Women's Social and Political union, together with the Socialists and other organizations, with bands playing, marched in small detachments from various points to the square. Many of the women carried banners inscribed with the words "Votes for Women."

Premier Asquith was the known the object of the demonstration, which was to present a petition to Secretary Bryan. It is well understood that to settle the question, no matter what the action of the United States senate, the administration must be ready to do the proper thing and be followed in arranging for a judicial test of the California law, which would be taken to the supreme court of the United States.

Secretary Bryan is also understood to be willing for the issue to be made in such a way that the California legislature will not be humiliated by the abrogation of the treaty.

Washington, May 6.—Secretary Bryan will send to Governor Johnson of California, legislature and the ambassador will endeavor to allay excitement and decrease Bryan's reign in Washington in preparing a formal protest the message.

CALIFORNIA BILL CAUSES ROW IN CHINA

NOT CERTAIN WHETHER QUESTION COULD BE SUBMITTED TO HAGUE TRIBUNAL.

JAPAN GOING TO FILE PROTEST

Will Be Handed Secretary Bryan on His Return to Washington—Courts Will be Asked for Ruling.

Washington, May 7.—The Japanese embassy has been supplied by the state department with a copy of the California legislature and the anti-Japanese bill which the house and senate will consider, the differences between now and Secretary Bryan's return to Washington in preparing a formal protest against the measure.

The Hague Court of Inquiry.

Apparently the embassy has no hope that any word President Wilson may send after Secretary Bryan confers will influence Governor Johnson to withhold his signature from the act, so the only object of the protest will be to acquaint the American people with the Japanese viewpoint. It is possible, too, that the Japanese government may decide to submit the question of the validity of the California legislation to the Hague court of inquiry.

The Japanese have known the trend of the California diplomatic note to Secretary Bryan and do not understand that to settle the question, no matter what may be the point of objection, will require the action of the United States senate. And there the solution must be sought for the problem due to failure of the American treaty for a publication of the California law.

For Bryan to Decide.

It will be for Secretary Bryan to determine whether the United States government itself shall become a party to a suit of this character, in the capacity of an intervenor.

International lawyers hint that the administration is in an exceedingly delicate position, for the reason that, while apparently a champion of the Japanese, because the secretary of state before the California legislature, any action on this point on it must defend the California law against Japan in the diplomatic struggle about to ensue.

If the department should adopt the California contention that the land law does not violate the existing treaty with Japan, then it might feel bound to refuse to submit the issue to arbitration by the Hague tribunal. Furthermore, it is contended that the United States government probably would be unable to enforce the decree of the original in case it should be adverse to the rights of the Japanese, for the reason that the state legislature from its rights to establish the law.

No case has yet been found where the supreme court has passed on the question of a treaty which is subsequent to the legislature enactment of the law. The last case of importance was that of Chae Chan Ping, a Chinese laborer, who was denied admission to the United States under the Chinese exclusion act. The state department has nothing to publish in that direction and probably must establish a precedent in pursuing its present course.

Abrogation of Coffee Valorization Scheme Causes Financial Sickness in Republic.

Washington, May 7.—American manufacturers probably will lose a great deal of trade with Brazil to the amount of $100,000,000 or more this year as well as a lucrative business opportunity, according to reports to the state department, as a result of the financial embarrassment of the republic, brought on by the abrogation of coffee valorization scheme by the government of Brazil.

Chicago, May 7.—"You can't keep it here and if you don't go away I'll call a policeman," declared Mrs. Isabella Short, a well-to-do woman, who called to the door of her home in the suburb of Rogers Park, when Jacob Routbuder, a ragged, ragtag and bobtail specimen of humanity, applied for admittance. Then the visitor gave his name. He was a brother of Mrs. Short, whom he had not seen for years. After the explanation the sister readily identified him and Jake Routbuder was welcomed to the home.

To Annihilate Social Evil.

Chicago, May 7.—Segregation of the social evil will be declared unlawful by three probate justices and a police captain's decision handed down in the municipal court today. The decision will affect the social evil district, as defined by the Mann law, prohibiting the transportation of women for immoral purposes from one state to another.

People Remain Calm in Tokio.

Tokio, May 7.—The announcement of the final passage of the naval expansion bill by the California legislature, Senator Smith's anti-alien bill, which unveiling a hatred to the people of the war by Samuel Pierpont Langley, secretary of the Smithsonian institution, and Gifford Pinchot, former chief forester, and a host of other prominent Americans, have failed to stir the people of Japan from their habitual calm.

Would Give Insurgents Control.

El Paso, Tex., May 7.—Wholesale killing which for fifteen days has held this city in a reign of terror, ceased today when Francisco Villa, provisional governor of Chihuahua, and commander of the constitutionalist forces in the state, declared martial law in Juarez and ordered the immediate execution of any person caught looting or committing any other crime. Villa's action followed the killing of fifteen persons, including two Americans, and the looting of many stores.

Bride Must Prove Health.

Montclair, N. J., May 7.—The engagement of Miss Jane Gay Fairchild, daughter of Mrs. Helen Fairchild of this city, to Dr. Frederick Jackson, president of the Christian Union Congress of Scandinavia, has been broken off, according to a statement issued this morning by Dr. Jackson. Dr. Jackson announces that he will not consummate the marriage unless his fiancee passes a satisfactory physical examination.

MOB SCENE IN DISORDER

Efforts of Suffragettes to Get Hearing in Parliament Cause General Disturbance.

London, May 6.—With the police under order not to use violence in dispersing Trafalgar Square under the auspices of the Pop-gun Defense committee, the police, itself to prevent speeches from the Whitball side, [illegible] the plinth of the Nelson column and only the intervention of James Kier Hardie, Socialist and independent labor member of the house of commons, who was chairman of the meeting, prevented a serious riot.

As it was, the disorders, many others culminating in fisticuffs, between the rowdy element and the police continued for almost two hours.

By the time the marching Socialists, labor and other organizations, with bands playing the Marseillaise, reached Trafalgar Square, 50,000 persons had gathered there and as many more in the surrounding streets.

Permission to hold a meeting was given at the last moment on the understanding that no suffragettes should be allowed to speak. Unable to secure permission to march in uniform, the members of the Women's Social and Political union, headed by the duchess of Marlborough, with the duchess of Rutland, Mrs. Pankhurst, Mrs. Pethick Lawrence and other prominent members of the organization, marched to the meeting place, preceded by a huge banner bearing the words: "Where there's a will there's a way."

Trouble began when a Socialist speaker began to address the crowd from the Whitehall side of the column. The agreement had been, it seems, that no speaking should take place on this side because of the interference with traffic. A lively sergeant standing on the plinth behind the speaker promptly ordered him to desist. He refused and was pulled down.

The scene then entered the climatic and endeavored to replace the speaker. It looked for a time as if there would prove personal, but the mounted police ruthlessly rode down the rioters. Several fierce fights ensued and the Socialist leaders were obliged to finally withdraw.

In a moment a suffragette attempted to climb to the plinth. The police being tied by their hands, [illegible] pathizers on the platform succeeded in dragging her up. Her dress was torn and pieces of [illegible] left in the hands of the police. Senator Hitchcock declared that Senator Root's attitude was "a case of the ambassadorial conference of London, Paris and Berlin."

New York, May 7.—Twenty blushing brides ran down the gangplank of the S. S. California upon the arrival of that liner today and fell into each others' bridegrooms.

Coldness reigned until the immigration authorities found that eight of the girls and their husbands had the same identity and told them they said they would all stand together, and the twenty couples left the island in a body. The FAMOUS CITY of the SUN

THE GERMAN EMPEROR'S TABLET

THE TEMPLE OF BACCHUS

AMONG the many ruins to be found in the east, those of Baalbek, in Syria, are second to none in interest. During the last four years German archaeologists have been busy excavating there, and every visitor to the ruins owes them a debt of gratitude. They have not only dug down and removed many tons of rubbish and debris, thereby exposing the ruins to better view, but they have also strengthened the weak portions. It was not entirely a disinterested work, however.

for the Berlin museums now possess many of the finest examples of ancient Greek and Roman art.

Baalbek is the name of a ruined city of ancient Coele-Syria, signifying the "City of Baal," the sun god. The name was converted by the Greeks, during the Seleucidian dynasty, into its Greek equivalent, Heliopolis. It is situated in latitude 34 degrees, 1 minute north, longitude 36 degrees, 11 minutes east, in the plain of Bukaa's, at the northern extremity of a low range of bleak hills, about one mile from the base of Anti-Lebanon, in a well watered and delightful locality, a little more than 40 miles northwest of Damascus. It was once the most magnificent of Syrian cities, full of palaces, fountains and beautiful monuments.

These ruins are known as the Acropolis and are unique for their massiveness and for the great amount of both bold and delicate carving with which they are adorned. There is, indeed, so much carving and such variety as to make one's first visit bewildering. The temples being built on a flat plain, it was important to raise them above the surrounding level to render them more imposing, and to that end there are vast substructures and vaults and passages supporting the shrines. The most imposing was that of the great Temple of the Sun, which was a rectangular building 290 feet by 160, having its roof supported by a peristyle of 54 Corinthian columns, 10 at each side and 19 at each end. Of these six are still standing. The circumference of these columns is about 22 feet, and the length of the shaft about 60 feet, with pedestal, capital and entablature they measure about 80 feet in height. The great Temple of the Sun occupied a platform on the Acropolis about 1,000 feet by 450 feet. The main entrance of the temple was on the east. Here a wide flight of steps led up to a portico 19 feet above the gardens and orchards that now surround the ruins. An inscription on the great portico states that the temple was erected to the "Great Gods" of Heliopolis by Antoninus.

Beyond the portico is a hexagonal court through which a large gateway opens into the great square, at the west end of which is the temple on a lofty substruction. Except the column mentioned, little of the great temple or of the buildings in front of it is left standing, but the ground is covered with their ruins. The vast size of the stones used in the substructures of the great platform is remarkable, some of them being over 60 feet long and 12 feet thick.

South from the great temple is a smaller one known as the Temple of Jupiter. It is smaller in form, having its peristyle and its walls of its cella still mostly standing. Its dimensions are 227 feet in length by 117 feet in breadth, with 15 columns at the sides and 8 at each end. Both temples as well as the surrounding structures were built of limestone, in a richly adorned and somewhat fantastic Corinthian style. Besides these there stands at a distance of 300 yards from the others a circular building supported on six granite columns built in mixed Ionic and Corinthian style.

Nearby also are the remains of the Temple of Bacchus, famed for its magnificent carvings. Here are enormous slabs of stone elaborately carved with the heads of emperors and deities and interwoven with floral designs, the whole forming a unique ceiling. The portal is the gem of the entire edifice. The door posts are beautifully carved with figures of Bacchus, fawns, nymphs, satyrs and bacchantes, among which are grape vines and clusters of fruit, poppies and ears of wheat, all of which are symbolical of the revelling which the scene of the temple suggests.

This great doorway stands 42 feet high and 21½ feet wide, while the carving of the posts just mentioned covers a space about six feet wide. On both sides of this door stand graceful fluted columns forming the prostyle or portico, while the plain ones of the peristyle, which stands between them, seem to reflect their beauty.

The mammoth stones contained in the isolating wall of the Acropolis have been the marvel of engineers for ages. The lowest courses are of stones of enormous dimensions, but at a height of 20 feet above the ground on the west wall is a row of three enormous stones, the shortest being 62 feet and the largest 63 feet in length, and each being about 13 feet high and 10 feet thick. They are the largest building blocks ever known to have been used by man. A still larger stone lies in the ancient quarry, never having been detached from the rock beneath. This one is 70 feet long by 14 feet by 13 feet

At an early period the Arabs converted the temples into the fortresses, and to this end, to a certain extent, removed them. Their work, however, has now been removed by the Germans.

The early history of Baalbek is involved in darkness, but it is certain that from the most distant times it had been a chief seat of sun-worship, as its name implies. Augustus made it a Roman colony and placed there a garrison. Baalbek had an oracle held in such high esteem that in the second century A. D. it was consulted by the Emperor Trajan prior to his entrance on his great Parthian campaign. Antoninus Pius (A. D. 138-161) built the great temple which the legend current among the modern inhabitants ascribes to Solomon. The platform and substructures, however, are of a much earlier date. This temple is said to have contained a golden statue of Apollo, or of Zeus, which on certain annual festivals the chief citizens of Heliopolis bore about on their shoulders. When Christianity, under Constantine, became the dominant religion, the temple became a Christian church, in the wars that followed the taking of the city by the Arabs, who seized it in A. D. 748, the temple was turned into a fortress. The city was completely pillaged by Timur in A. D. 1400. Both city and temple continued to fall more and more into decay under the misery and anarchy in which Syria has been subject ever since. Many of the magnificent pillars were overturned by the pashas of Damascus merely for the sake of the iron with which the stones were bound together. When the Arabs, Tartars and Turks had spent their fury a terrible earthquake in 1759. Baalbek is now an insignificant village with a population of about 2,000, more than half of whom are Christians.

ELK GIVEN STATES

Thousands Needed by Government Agents on Preserves.

Herds Will Be Kept From Starving to Death, and the Overfeeded Ranges Will Soon Be Replenished.

Denver.—The long-promised distribution of elk from Jackson's Hole and Yellowstone National Park has begun. Thousands of the animals are now being rounded up by cowboys on the overstocked range in Wyoming and Montana, and are being shipped by the carload to states that have sent in requests for them.

A carload of eighty elk, rounded up on the Yellowstone Park region and shipped from Gardiner, Mont., the northern gateway to the Yellowstone, arrived in Denver the other day on their way to Arizona. These elk will be turned out upon their new range in Arizona. They will be protected from hunters, under state laws, and will be given every opportunity to increase.

In the last few weeks herds of elks have been sent in this way to Pennsylvania, West Virginia, North Dakota, Washington, Oregon and California.

Only one of the Arizona consignment died en route. It is necessary to give the elk a rest every day. They are unloaded from all the cars and put into convenient corrals, and, after a few hours' rest, proceed on their journey. In this way the loss is comparatively small.

The government was forced to adopt this plan to prevent the elk in the west from going the way of the buffalo to extinction. Most of the elk in the Rocky mountains had ranged north until they reached the Jackson's Hole region south of Yellowstone Park. Here they congregated in vast herds. The number of elk in that region has been estimated at from 25,000 to 100,000 head, but C. D. Nowlin, forest game commissioner of Wyoming, who is now at the head of the work of transportation carried out by the government biological survey, estimates that the smaller number is nearer correct.

Last year congress appropriated a considerable sum for the care and feeding of the Jackson's Hole elk, which were starving in the deep snows. Government employes, aided by ranchmen, carried hay to the elk ranges, especially in the early spring. Hundreds of calves, as well as adults, were dying of starvation.

The loss of thousands of elk were saved by feeding, but it was soon demonstrated that this measure of relief was only tremendous expense to keep up the work of feeding so it was determined to distribute the elk among the states that put in applications for herds and that were willing to pay the expenses of transportation and guarantee protection to the animals after arrival.

Many states have already applied for this offer. Probably 1,500 elk have been shipped, and the number will be trebled before the shipping season has ended.

The elk are rounded up in the deep snows and driven to Gardiner. Ranchmen, state game wardens, forest rangers and Yellowstone Park employes are assisting in the work. It is easy to round up the elk, which become "stalled" in the deep snows.

Under old conditions State Game Warden Hudson of Wyoming reported that nine out of ten elk calves born in the Jackson's Hole region died before they were four weeks old.

"In all elk government has appropriated close to $100,000 for elk protection. The appropriation is generally approved, as it will result in replenishing the depleted elk ranges of many states, and will give the fast disappearing elk of this country a new lease of life. In a few years states which have not had elk hunting for generations will be enabled to issue elk-hunting licenses for brief periods each year.

COUNTY'S WOLF HUNT

Montana's Pest Run Down by Dogs and Men.

Thirteen Timber Wolves Are Tracked and Slaughter While Still Alive in Corral by the Hungry Animals.

Philipsburg, Mont.—A big gray wolf that had been the terror of the stockmen of the Rock Creek country, Granite county, since early fall, was finally run down by a pack of hounds in charge of mounted hunters. The wolf was last seen in the Rock Creek mountains by "Jack" Gutmann, a rancher of Rock creek, and Fred Hinks, a professional hunter from Colorado. Mr. Hinks' dogs continued the chase for gray wolf for several days and compelled the two to discontinue.

Timber wolves were numerous in the Rock Creek country before last fall. This pair is supposed to have come across from the Big Hole country. Many depredations among the stock on Willow and Rock creeks were committed by the wolves before stockmen were aware of the presence of this pair of the section. A few stockmen who knew of the characteristic manner in which the wolf attacks his prey started the belief that wolves were actually in the country, and the stockmen of Granite county offered a reward of $75 to any one killing one of the pair. Organization and afterward, raised it to $150 when the wolves slaughtered were unavailing by individuals on the hunt.

About three weeks ago the whole Rock Creek country rose up to do or perish, but found the wolf a wily animal to deal with. All day long and all night long the howling of wolf packs could be heard in the mountains

It may as well be said that the dear little bridegroom-to-be will soon be promising to obey and several other things.

Sam T. Gordon of the Browns Valley Tribune says that the governor should not vacate his office to the extent of a year, but he is then standing consistently pat on his rather spectacular denunciation of his opinion on this point.

Major Hankerburg of Philadelphia in welcoming a delegation of prominent Englishmen to his city said, "peace among English speaking secure is appeared even more desirable than peace among English speaking people." His guests no doubt approved that sentiment and would go farther and say that nothing short of universal peace was so much to be desired.

Of course the removal of the duty on raw sugar will in many cases have little effect on he price to be paid for the finished manufactured article or on the business of the manufacturer. The tariff on the three or four pounds of wool that go into a good suit or on the tax for a pair of shoes or pair of gloves does not "touch up" many people. It is not until the duty on the finished product is removed that the real "squeal" is heard.

and Downer Mullen the purchasing agent. Both have been connected with the department ever since its organization. Up to a year ago Mark Cutter of Anoka was purchasing agent, but he saw the handwriting on the wall and retired to go into the publishing business at Thief River Falls. Mark never hit it off with the administration and he saw what was coming so he got out.

You probably will ask, why this house cleaning, why this discarding of departments that seem to be delivering the goods? Oear reader, this administration keeps books and just now they are being posted. Those who have failed to come up to the standard fixed by the leaders have simply got to go. Less majesty is not tolerated up here in any form. Every political leader keeps books—they say C. F. Staples, the state auditor, claims he does not, but he does just the same—only there is a difference in the method of bookkeeping. Those now in charge are inclined to the old method which in effect is to credit or exit. When the Johnson administration held the reins ability to deliver was the sole requisite. Placate your enemies was one of its slogans and more than one "knocker" of influence was taken into camp as a result. To the victors belongs the spoils was regarded as all right, but it was not permitted to interfere with the taking over of an enemy was decided upon as necessary for the good of the cause. It was just like the good old days of the caucus. When the man with a pocketful of embarrassing resolutions, or one likely to make trouble showed up he was promptly made chairman by the gang. His views were stifled. Sometimes I think there is too much of the Indian about one or two of those close to Governor Eberhart. They refuse to forget, for the time at least, several new virtues the breakfast table and let me tell you these several would be a formidable factor in the perpetuation scheme which is on if they were taken in. No good leader is without his enemies. He would not be a leader if he did not have enemies, but there is such a thing as keeping the number as small as possible. What is your opinion, eh?

You have undoubtedly heard of the sudden resignation of H. J. Mashfel, state immigration commissioner, and the just as sudden acceptance by the state board of his resignation of his resignation—at once, mind you. Max wanted to remain until next August. Though the commission gave it out that his violation of a rule forbidding the sending of lists of inquirers for state lands to real estate men and concerns was responsible, and Mr. Maxfield in turn explained that he could not stand for the secrecy imposed, the whole thing is shrouded in more or less mystery. As I get it Maxfield, when called for favoring certain real estate concerns, which he has since denied in a published statement, promptly told the members of the board that he had done so because certain persons close to the governor had requested it. His loyalty, however, did not save him, as the board, with Secretary of State Schmahl and State Auditor Iverson heading the outraged forces, met the next day and proceeded to eat his goat. His executioners would like to have interfered, as Maxfield has made a good immigration commissioner, but he scented trouble and bolted aloof. Maxfield, I am told, is going into the real estate investment business.

Following the scalding of Maxfield the same boss conferred the title of assistant commissioner on Fred Sherman, chief clerk in the office, and raised his salary from $1,800 to $2,400, but that is about as far as he will go. Sherman is a protege of W. E. Lee, who ran for the Republican nomination for governor last fall, and while Sherman did not get out and labor for Lee he refused to tear his shirt for the administration candidate. He frankly told the leaders that he could not bite the hand that had fed him. Iverson and Schmahl, it is said, are for Sherman strong, but other interests have interfered and for the present Maxfield's job is open, with a horde of candidates clamoring for recognition. Sherman has been with the department since its organization, and now thinks he can a paper at Gray Eagle.

An economical streak is on in the state fire marshal's department and salaries have been cut, not to speak of the temporary retirement of Sam Fullerton, long in the employ of the state. Fullerton is the way Fire Marshal Keller speaks of Mr. Fullerton's retirement. Another who it is said is booked for a lengthy vacation is A. B. Brown, who figured as state chairman when J. F. Jacobson made an unsuccessful run for governor. The reason for the economy is a lack of funds. The department spent too much last year and the legislature failed to make the deficit good.

The so called mothers' pension law passed by the last legislature threatens to wark out in a reid on the several county treasuries of the state. Since its enactment hundreds of petitions for county aid have been filed under the impression that the main purpose of the act is to pension needy mothers. The idea given the law is really a misnomer and is responsible for a good deal of trouble. It is for the purpose of caring for dependent and neglected children and they must be such before any help for them can be given. The number threatens to run up into the thousands. The mothers' pension bill may yet be the costliest thing attempted.

The late legislature amended the anti-pass law to the extent of permitting municipalities having street railways to contract with the companies owning the same to carry uniformed officials at a low rate of fare. St. Paul and Minneapolis, the first to take advantage of the law, entered into a contract with the Twin City Rapid Transit company on a basis of $2 a year for three years. Now the state legal department has come forward with an opinion to the effect that there is nothing in the way of the federal government entering into a similar agreement. Attorney-General Simpson was attorney general he delivered himself of the opinion that the anti-pass law was worth the paper it was written on. Class legislation was what he called it.

The progressive order of things is all right, but we have been slow about doing it. Skim Milk May Be Used Profitably Here.

MILK FOR HOGS.

By H. R. FLINT, University Farm, St. Paul.

Sweet milk, skim milk, sour skim milk and butter milk are of practically equal value when fed in the proportion of two and one-half to three pounds of milk to one pound of shelled corn, says the South Dakota Experiment Station at Brookings in its Bulletin 134. If you are interested in this subject it will pay you to write for a full account of the feeding tests on which this and other conclusions were based. A bushel of shelled corn when fed with water produced an average of 11.9 pounds of pork, but when fed with 163 pounds of milk the average weight of pork produced in the same length of time was 17.7 pounds. While this is no indication of the value of milk when fed alone, it seems to show that when fed with shelled corn, 163 pounds of skim milk of little or no market value on the average farm, produced 5.8 pounds of pork worth 40 cents at last year's prices.

In many factories the secret of success has been found in the discovery that the application of some principle of turning former waste into a profitable byproduct. The same principles seem to be applied to the farm and farmers have not-been slow in making this use of any extra milk.

ROTATION OF CROPS.

Do Not Sow Spring Wheat on Land Last Used for Rye.

Complaint was received last fall that spring wheat came into the Minneapolis markets containing a mixture of rye. The mixture is caused by growing wheat on land that raised rye last year, the rye appearing as a volunteer crop. The rye in the wheat is detrimental to its value for flour-making purposes and the millers and grain buyers naturally discriminate against the mixture.

It is suggested that trouble along this line can be avoided by following the rye crop with a coarse feed crop or with a hay crop if possible. This can also be provided for by the proper arrangement of crops in rotation. A six-year rotation of rye, timothy and clover, pasture, corn, wheat, rye and oats would be satisfactory, where these crops can be used. It is somewhat more difficult to have the oats rye in a short rotation if the grasses are used. A crop rotation must always be arranged with a view to the kind of farming that a person is doing and to supply the needs of the individual farm.

It is believed that the mixture of rye in the spring wheat is serious enough to justify sowing oats or feed barley after the rye crop, or using rye as a nurse crop in seeding down.—Andrew Boss, Agriculturist, University Farm, St. Paul.

BEAUTY OF FARM LIFE.

Get Away From the Cares and Worries of the City.

There has come to be much a lively interest in the farmer on the part of the consuming public as there is today. Everyone wants to see him stay on the old farm and make it yield more abundantly and with greater certainty, in order that he may be happy and that the people may be fed. Those of us who were born on the farm, and worked from before sun-up till after sun-down, in cold and heat, rains and drouth, to produce milk, butter and bread, and it was not separated from the farm in some way and by the cares and worries of life, how we got back to the country, where we can hear the birds sing, and find the fragrance of the new mown hay, and have plenty of fruit and vegetables, free range as of old and nothing to do but get up in the morning at 4 o'clock, see the sun rise, milk the cows, do the chores, eat breakfast, plow, sow, reap and sell. That is very beautiful, attractive but it is! The wonder is that we ever left it and that some have persisted in that state. Get out the smoke, the dirty, busy turmoil of the city, back to the clean, clean, restful country, where life is free from killing cares.—Dean A. F. Woods, University Farm, St. Paul.

Prevent Fruit Diseases.

By E. C. STAKMAN, Assistant Plant Pathologist, University Farm, St. Paul.

During the past seasons there was no small amount of loss from two serious fruit diseases. The most destructive were, apple scab, some of the apple, plum which also attacks apples, and plum pockets, the latter is rather difficult to estimate. However, in unsprayed orchards, from 25 to 70 per cent of the apples were not uncommonly effected. Many plum orchards were observed which showed a loss of 10 to 15 per cent, due to plum pocket, while very frequently at least 50 per cent of the fruit was rotted early by the brown rot fungus. In the case of brown rot the loss is even greater than would be indicated by the large number of rotted plums. The fungus also attacks the leaves, leaves and young twigs. A great deal of flower blight also occurred last year.

There is no reason whatever why these losses cannot be reduced to a very slight amount. By proper spraying methods the losses due to apple scab have been reduced in some cases as age of 50 per cent to about 2 or 3 per cent. These results have been accomplished in a number of different states. Experiments at the Minnesota Station indicate that there is no reason why the same may not be done here.

The diseases mentioned persist during the winter on the mummy plums in the cans of plum pocket, probably in the twigs. This being the case, all diseased material should be destroyed in the fall. If this is not done, it will be a source of infection in the spring. The rufous should all be collected and burned. This alone will add greatly in keeping diseases in check. If followed early this spring by a dormant spray, the results obtaining sachhgas later in the season there should be no trouble in growing sound fruit.

SOFT SOAPS.

Difficult to Judge of Their Quality Without Testing.

Vegetable oil is used in flaxseed oil, sesame oil, and some poorer grades of other fats and oils are very generally used in the making of soft soaps. It is not wise to buy soft soaps in very large quantities because some of them do not keep well in summer. Others deteriorate in winter, and it is difficult to tell which. No one would judge of their quality without first testing a certain brand, and learning how temperature affects it. Soft soaps are usually colored, though not necessarily "dark." Linseed oil soap is brown, some others green, and some are yellowish.

Soft soaps may be readily adulterated with cheap resin, because it is especially stringy and glossy in appearance should be avoided. Linseed oil soft soap is a safe investment. A rule that oil soaps melt readily, as it is difficult to tell when soft soaps will be made by heating the soap and water together between the hands because if the soap is simply rubbed on the clothes, much of it is likely to be undissolved in the bottom of the tub or, in a sat tub, be run into the sewer when the tub is emptied. Hard soap is better bought in quantity and dried before using, as it then wears less if carelessly left lying in the tub or machine. Soft soap should be bought by the keg or kit because it is less expensive in large than in small packages. Linseed oil soap is the one quality has very little free alkali, hence is a good soap for general cleaning also for washing wool.—A Short-course Domestic Science, University Farm, St. Paul.

The victims of the raid were two restaurant men, two soft drink parlor men and two common "piggers". All the accused are being held under $500 heads each.—Argyle Banner.

Local dealers who handle cigarettes should bear in mind the provisions of the new law unless they are prepared for a generous assessment when the inspector appears. The sale of cigarettes or "the makings" to adults is now lawful, but the dealer must first procure a license. The license fee is $25.00 and in cities and villages it is granted by the city or village council and in unincorporated villages or for the cross roads store it is granted by the board of county commissioners. The license is granted for a term of two years.

Next to falling victim to the wiles of the man who sells mining stock, oil stock or Florida everglades, the man who dreams of the outcome of a supposed weather-producing scheme goes into the poultry business and counts the eggs before they are laid and the chickens before they are hatched. When he fails to realize on the dreams as anticipated he may put in electric lights to induce the chickens to lay nights as well as days or he may go in for "runner" ducks that can't tell day light from dark and does not keep any accurate account of egg-production. By practicing various kinds of deception local poultry fanciers claim to have induced their industrious and innocent hens to work every-time. But there is no doubt that there will be a short crop some day when the hens get wise to this deception. Wm. Schaper, who says that he has been very skeptical about much of the poultry yard gossit he has heard, claims to own the champion turkey hen and there is no false about it. She waltzed up to the seat in the presence of witnesses and, presto, there are two eggs in the nest. Mr. Schaper says that if she isn't the "champeen" turkey hen she's the cleverest turkey magician outside of a side show.

LAMBERT (OKLEE)

Wheat has been sowed for two weeks and is just beginning to come up, oats is now going in also, early potatoes and some corn, but the general opinion is that late sprin has cut the acreage down one third.

Joe Palardeau shipped to western Canada over the 800 last week. Mr. Palardeau has not sold out here but wants more land—cheap, and cheap lands here are a thing of the past.

Many new settlers are unloading cars a Oklee ths spring, some going to Gatzke township and others go along the Clearwater river as far east as Lilly in Equality township, while Lambert and Chesster in Polk county are getting their share. One and all tell the same story, that they find our land as good at from $20 to $30 per acre as that they sold at $100 to $200 per acre.

Peter Anseken returned from the Bemidji hospital last Saturday evening. He has gained a great deal, but is unable to use his left arm or to walk alone, as yet.

Lou Berry is again in the hospital having suffered a relapse of heart trouble. Mr. Berry is a worthy old man and his friends are worried as to the outcome.

C. D. Hall brought a jolly crowd down from Oklee to witness the ball game at Brooks. Mr. Hall is having a lot of fun and gaining some experience these days with his Overland.

Mrs. C. O. Bakke is away at Fertile visiting old friends, and Mr. Bakke looks as if he has his friends left.

Miss Laura Lee has gone to Oklee visit her sisters, Mr.'s. A. Lambart and Miss Alvina. at Beaulette, where the latter has a fine 2 million.

Mrs. McManus, the music teacher from Oklee, has gone to Idaho or reside with her son.

Fred Bender sold r nt his big feed mill at Oklee to Da s Skerson, who will carry on the bus ness in connection with his feed as a flour store.

Nap Millar, Chas. Seeger and Jim Morrell have now bu dings going up in town. Nap for charlie have wires to keep their new houses, but what will Jimmie do with his?

Telegrams and mail are exchanged between Bonnie and Dominick's wife, and never reach their destination. Bonnie and Jerry are married. Father and mother are divorced on explanation. Bonnie's brother refuses to meet Dominick. Bonnie sends word to say that he must either be friendly to Dominick or break with Bonnie. Dominick is married.

CHAPTER X—(Continued).

On the Saturday morning she went out between inquiry at the railway office told her that the train which connected with the branch line to Rocky Bar did not reach the city till noon on Sunday. She ordered a dinner of the choicest viands and spent part of the morning passing from stall to stall in the market on Powell Street, saying about the dainties and would add a last exhorting touch to the knotty menu. The afternoon was devoted to the solemn rites of manicure, manicuring, and hair-waving at a beauty doctor's. On an ordinary occasion these unwonted exertions in the pursuit of good looks would have tired her, but today she was keyed to a pitch where she did not notice small outside discomforts.

Long before six she was dressed, and sitting before the mirror in her room she laid on the last perfecting touches with a short stick of hard red substance and a circular piece of moisty-looking white stuff, which she rubbed with a rotary motion round and round her face. Her new dress of raspberry pink crepe betrayed the hand of an expert in its gracefully-falling folds and the elegance with which it outlined her slim, long-waisted shape. Her artificially-reddened hair waved back from her forehead in glossy ripples; her face, all lines and hollows rubbed from it, looked fresh and youthful. The subdued light falling on her through the silk and paper lamp shades, she looked a very pretty woman, the darkness of her long, brilliant eyes due to art in the last point, as she wanted to know what degree of intimacy he had reached with the Bonanza King. Several times already she had tried to direct the conversation towards that subject, but it had been deflected by the young man, who seemed to find less personal topics more to his taste. Now she was attending upon him, inquiring about the snow-bound group of Perley's, and according to any of the vague name for which her ears were pricked a perfunctory attention.

"Really, Darcy, I Don't Know," Answered the Victim.

"Been in the Klondike?" she repeated. "What was his name?"

"Buford, James Delray Buford. He'd been an actor at the opera house at Dawson."

"Buford," said Beryy, turning to place a bedding of peas on the plate the Chinaman held toward her. "I never heard of him. I thought perhaps it might have been some actor I'd seen play. I'd like to know an actor. It's private life. They must be an different."

She looked a second spoonful of peas on to her own plate and as she began to eat them, said:

"It must have been interesting having the Cannons up there. When I read in the paper that they were in Antelope ton, I was awfully glad because I thought it would be such a good thing for you to get to know the old man. Well, as you would, soowed in that way together."

"I knew him before. My father and mother have been friends of his for years."

"I know that. You've often told me. But that's a different thing. I thought it'd be good to know you intimately and liked you, as he probably would"—she glanced at him with a coquettish smile, but his face was bent over his plate—"why, then, something might come of it, something in a business way." She again looked at him, quickly, with dubious investigation, to see how he took the remark. She did not want to irritate him by alluding to his small means, anyway on this night of reconciliation.

"I should be so useful for you to get solid with a man like Bill Canno," she continued with something of timidity in her manner.

Despite her caution, Dominick seemed enraged. He frowned and his face bit hard on impotent jerk.

"Oh, there was nothing of that kind," he said hurriedly. "We were mostly indoors, in the same hotel. There was no question of intimacy or friendship about it, any more than there was between Judge Washington and me, or even the actor."

Beryy's exceedingly disappointed. Had the occasion been a less momentous one she would have expressed herself freely. In her mind she thought it was "just like Dominick to have such an opportunity and let it go. A slight color deepened the artificial rose of her cheeks and for a moment she had to exert some control to maintain the silence that was wise wisdom. She picked dalotity at her food while she wrestled with her irritation. Dominick showed no desire to resume the conversation, and a silence of some minutes' duration reigned over them, until she broke it by saying with a resolute cheerfulness of tone:

"Rose Cannon was there, too, the paper said. I suppose you got to know her quite well?"

"I don't know. I saw a good deal of her. There was only one sitting-room and we all sat there. She was there with the others."

"What's she like?" said Beryy, her curiosity on the subject of this spoiled child of fortune overcoming her recent annoyance.

"You're coon her," he answered. "You know what she looks like."

"I've never seen her to know who she was. I suppose they lived mostly on the streets and at the theaters. Is she cordial and pleasant, or does she give service, like Cannon's daughter?"

Dominick moved his feet under the table. It was difficult for him to answer Beryy's questions politely.

"She doesn't give herself the least airs. She's perfectly simple and not vain and kind."

"That's just what I've heard; his eyes staring before her, two straight lines folded in the skin between her brows.

"Hoy should I know whether her hair was bleached or not?" he said sharply. "That's a very silly question."

Beryy was taken aback.

"I don't see that it is," she said with unusual and somewhat stammering mildness. "Most blonde-haired women, even if they haven't bleached their hair, have had it 'restored.'"

Dominick did not answer her. The sarcasm generated a dish at his elbow and he motioned it away with an impatient gesture.

Beryy, who was not looking at him, went on.

"What kind of clothes did she wear? They say she's an elegant dresser, gets them from Worth, and, besides, even her underwear. . I suppose she didn't have her best things up there. But she must have had something decent because the papers said they'd gone prepared for a 'week end party.'"

"I never noticed anything she wore."

"Well, isn't that just like you, Dominick Ryan!" exclaimed his wife, enable, at the same time, disappointment, to refrain from some expression of her feelings. "And you might know I'd be anxious to hear what she had on."

"I'm very sorry, but I haven't an idea about any of her clothes. I think they were always quietly black or brown."

"Did you notice," almost pleadingly, "what she wore when she went out? Mrs. Whiting, the female of Ward's millionary, says she imported a set of sables, muff, wrap and hat, for her last journey. Most people think that the finest thing of it kind you ever did see. Did you notice that, or didn't you happen to notice?"

"I couldn't possibly tell you. I don't know what sables are. I saw her once with a fur coat on, but I haven't belonged to Willoughby, so Englishman who was staying there, and used to have our dining-room all to ourselves. I'm sure I don't care to hear about things like that. Did you wind in the bird's nest?"

He looked at the clock, a possession of his own, given him in the days when his mother had been delighted to ornament his rooms with costly gifts and by which he had since before evinced the slightest interest.

"Of course, I have," she answered with an air of hurt protest. "Haven't I wound it regularly for nearly three years?"

This brought the subject of Rose Cannon to an end and she was not allowed to again during the dinner. The conversation reverted to such happenings in the city as Beryy thought might interest her husband, and it seemed to her that he was even more pleased to sit and listen to her chatter than before. At last, the meal was core, and the shops, then to dilate any further on the adventures in the snow-bound Sierra.

When the dinner was over, they returned to the front of the flat, where next to the parlor there was a tiny hall-room fitted up as a smoking-room and den. It was merely a continuation of the hall, "the cozy corner" which Beryy had had a Polk Street upholsterer manufacture. It, unquied most of the available space, and, crowded amid, visitors as entered it into the doorway. Here Dominick's idea to have this room "lined with books" was disappointed. It, but their point possessions in this line consisted of three volumes of poetry, and the fact that the contracted space made it impossible to display more than both the backs and the cover covers. Beryy had decided in favor of the latter. She now, as they entered, had given that formed the integral part of the conversation by putting the pillows behind her, leaned luxuriously back under the light of the reading-lamp and sometimes with no sound at all, till she could see that he was sitting and leaned back under the canopy. In a silence that was not by any means a comfortable one she sat watching him, her eyes fixed on him, expressive of light but not from an open doorway of his room.

"Dominick," she called, "what are you doing?"

He came to the door of the room in his shirt-sleeves, with his long-handled lean and powerful in this closer-fitting and lighter garb.

"I'm unpacking my things, and than I'm going to bed."

"Oh!" she answered with a falling inflection, leaning forward, with her elbows planted on her knees, causing creating sound of the man's heavy feet on the carpet as he went to the hall door. She sat looking at the clock, waiting for her husband to return, and then as he did not come back for what seemed singularly quiet she leaned forward and called in a voice raised high down its dim length. Dominick was not there, but a square of light fell out from an open doorway of his room.

"Dominick," she called, "what are you doing?"

Garceau, who is the star artist for the local base ball team, will be out of the game for a few weeks.

Adelord Laureat suffered a rather heavy loss by fire last Friday. Mr. Laureat went to his farm north of town to burn some brush. Before beginning his work he took off his coat which contained his watch and placed it in a safe place. He also removed his false teeth and careful placed them with the vest and the watch. After completing his work he went to get the things he had been so careful about, but all that he could find of his vest and his watch and his false teeth was a little pile of ashes.

Daniel King, who was here to attend to some business matters, left Tuesday evening to return to his home in Rochelle, Ill. Mr. King is a prosperous Illinois farmer who has wisely invested in Red Lake county real estate, having bought a farm, located three miles south of town, a year ago. Mr. King is very much pleased with his investment and is glad that he found what suits him in this fine farming country instead of having been carried away by the rams for North Dakota and Canada as lands as so many others were. He is a breeder of blooded cattle and says that one of his sons may get some future date locate here with some arlecocratic live stock.

George Larson and Ole Knutsen, two young fellows living near Oslee indulged excessively to intoxicants and got into considerable trouble. They drove to Brooks and while there Knutsen bumped into Mr. Perras, the blind man well known here, and without provocation struck Mr. Perras in the face fracturing his nose. The young men were placed under arrest and brought to this city. After they had sobered up they expressed much regret for their conduct. Since Knutsen had made a settlement with Mr. Perras by the payment of a cash consideration for the doctor's bill and damages, Judge Buse allowed the boys to plead guilty to the charge of drunkenness and fined them each one dollar and costs. The celebration costs Larson $13.50 and Knutsen $118.25. And they both announced that they ride on the water-wagon after this.

P. O. Mykleby and A. H. Thornton, farmers residing out east, were parties to an action, or two actions, that came up for final consideration in Justice Pierce's court Tuesday. Each man had sworn out a warrant for the arrest of the other on an assault and battery charge. The men had engaged in a fierce fistic encounter and each bore marks of the fray. The men are neighbors. The trouble belonging to Mykleby had gone over the head of Thornton and Mr. Thornton was about to take a hand in the stock when Mr. Mykleby appeared and objected. There were a few words and then the men went at each other "hammer and tongs". That it was no tough initiation of a fight but the real thing no one who heard the testimony or saw the men can doubt. Both were badly bruised. Justice Bass found each guilty of the charge brought against him, imposed a small fine and costs in each case and put both men under bonds to keep the peace.

There was no ball game last Sunday on account of rain.

The Man and the Cow.

The president of the Vermont Cow Testing association remarked recently that his association was "as much a man as it is a cow." BLANKED BROOKS.

Local Base Ball Team Took a 6 to 0 Contest.

In the base ball game played at Brooks Sunday between the Brooks and Red Lake Falls teams, the Red Lake Falls boys were the victors by a score of 6 to 0. As the score would indicate, the game was close enough and well enough played to be called an interesting contest.

Garceau was out of the game with an injured hand and Kotchenberg went in to do the heaving for the locals. He threw an excellent game, letting the Brooks team down with two hits.

The same teams will play in Red Lake Falls on the afternoon of Decoration Day, Friday, May 30.

MRS. DOLBY'S TALK

Her Heart Takes a Sudden Turn For the Worse.

BUT THE DEACON SLEEPS ON.

She Reviews Her Married Life at Great Length and Says Goodby to Her Successor—Soft Soap and Economy. The Deacon Wakens and Retires.

By M. QUAD.

(Copyright, 1913, by Associated Literary Press.)

After supper Deacon Dolby said he guessed he'd better clear the snow off his sidewalk, and as no valid objections he went out and put in an hour's hard work. He came in with backache and kicked off the shoes to dump himself down on the lounge.

Mrs. Dolby was clearing off the table and singing hymns, and though the singing was unmusical it seemed a comfort born. It finally lulled the deacon to sleep. He was snoring and dreaming when Mrs. Dolby approached a chair, she gasped:

"Samuel Dolby, I shall be as dead as the crowbar in bed a minute, and you'd better git up and give me a last command!"

Mr. Dolby sprinted in his throat as he slept, and without sensing to notice the condition she continued:

"Yes, Samuel, I've got my summons and I'm putter away the next days when my heart give a sudden lob, my head begun to go round and right before me I saw my coffin and my tombstone and I'm a mind I thought I was a goner, but then a small voice whispered to me that I'd five an hour longer and that the better come in and turn to you. I'm here to say some last dyin' words to you, Samuel, and, though I don't expect to have tears to your eyes, I do hope you'll listen and remember what I say."

Tears Begin to Fall.

At this juncture Mrs. Dolby's tears began to fall and her chin to quiver, and, being too busy with her emotions she did not even look Mr. Dolby's way. Swallowing at the lump in her throat, she said:

"Samuel, I've nlius kinder felt that in case of my death you'd marry ag'in, and it's nlius made me feel a little edgewise. But a change has come over me. It come two weeks ago. I'm now resigned to your inlin' a second wife, in fact, I think it's better you should. Mrs. Crockett was surlin' to me the other day that if I dropped off you'd marry your wife's lady of four weeks, so you'd want somebody to comb your hair, but I don't think you'd be a mean sa that. You'd wait at least three months, wouldn't you?"

Mr. Dolby seemed to reply, and, taking this as an answer in the affirmative, Mrs. Dolby went on:

"The usual thus is a year, but I hain't nlius got to wait that long for you. I've been a hardworkin' wife, and I've nlius saved every bit of the soap grease and made up the lye best in a way to surprise you, but I ain't sayin' for any grinder. I'm old and humbly and shall slighted, and I can't blame you if you kick up your heels arter I'm gone. Shall you go on a bridal tower with your second wife, Samuel? I ain't asked her name I'm jealous, you know, but I just out of curiosity. When we got married all the bridal tower we had was to go to the circus and come home in a thunderstorm, but if you want to go to Niagara Falls with your new wife don't stop on my account."

As Mr. Dolby hadn't been asked a direct question there was no call for him to wake up, and as Mrs. Dolby felt like weeping she had a fairly good time on it before saying further:

No Haunting to Be Done.

"I did think at one time that if you married a chit of a girl I'd come back and sit on the footboard of the bed and haunt you, but I've changed my mind about it. It ain't in me to be mean. While it 'pears to me that you'd better marry a widder woman about forty years old, if you decide on a girl of twenty, it ain't for me to raise no row. While a widder woman would be at work sewin' patches on your trousers and makin' apple butter, a gal wife would want to be swingin' in a hammock or playin' the melodeon. But it's your own bosom. The papers are full of gal wives runnin' away with the peddlers and you must jest rear'd 'em as well as me. Wen you thinkin' of a gal wife or a widder, Samuel?"

Mr. Dolby coughed a sigh and a snore and stood unwind, and after banging on to her chin to stop its shaking Mrs. Dolby continued:

"I was goin' to ask you to think of me once in awhile when I was gone, but I don't want to give you trouble. You'll lave 'nuff to think of with your new wife, and, as I'll be dyin' around in heaven, I'll be all right. Once in awhile, however—now to a stride, when your new wife spikes the bread, kicks the cat outdoors, breaks the nose off the tongs and kicks in the head of the vlounger barrel, I wish you'd just remember me kindest and say, 'Arter all, Sinall you her a new pump put into the well for your second wife, Samuel? The old one has bin out of order for nlne years, you know, and you've got to expect new ones every five years or so any ways. It'll be just like her to insist on a red pump and a green handle."

Mr. Dolby Still Sleeps.

There was no change in the situation as far as Mr. Dolby was concerned. He still slept, and he still sighed and snored.

"And I s'pose you'll whitewash the pigpen and bourrost and her new shingles on the roof of the house. When I want 6 cents for peppermint essence to settle my stummick it takes a week to get it out of you, but if your second wife wants $25 for furbelows you'll her to hand it right over at her a flea. She won't make one cursset less her for five years, and she won't go herefut to save her shoes. Heaven help her, therefore, what will it be to me? I'll be flapjin' my wings and bein' a blissful time, and if you ain't happy I shan't know it so more sweet it. About my dyin' Samuel, do you feel like you'd care to kiss me before I go?"

Mrs. Dolby bent over and got a sniff, and then she went on:

"I'd

BIG TRACTOR WENT THROUGH BRIDGE

DRIVER NARROWLY ESCAPED BEING PINNED UNDER BIG MACHINE.

Carmody's big gas tractor went through the Clearwater bridge early Saturday morning. A generous section of the bridge went down with the big engine and yet no one was injured and the machine was damaged only slightly.

It was the west approach to the main span that went down, and the base of the big engine landed on the ground near the water's edge, the nose sticking in the air.

Mr. Carmody and his crew arrived in town Friday night either late and put up for the night. It was customary that they did not attempt to cross the bridge that night with the consequences for at least one of the men would have been terribly scalded.

Mike Carmody drove the big engine onto the bridge and went down with it. How he escaped being pinned under the heavy weight is almost explain, but he landed between the base of the machine and one of the big wheels and was not injured in the least. The water from the tank poured over him, but it was cool, the engine having just been started. The previous night the water was boiling when the engine was stopped near the bridge.

The engine was moved to the repair shop late Saturday and by Sunday the bridge was repaired so that teams could pass over it.

The big engine picked out a soft place to light and the damage was slight.

HARROW GRAIN NOW

Guard Against Possible Dry Season Is the Advice of Expert.

The following statement made by Prof. P. R. Crone, J. J. Hill's crop expert, offers a suggestion that is worthy of consideration.

"Now that the seeding is practically done, the farmers in many sections will await developments for the harvest season.

"At the present time much of the North-west needs rain. There was considerable moisture in the soil at seeding time, but continued dry weather will soon exhaust the surface moisture, and unless the ground is stirred for a cultivated crop, there is great danger that we will have reduced yields at harvest time.

"If every farmer having grain fields would use a spike-tooth harrow with the teeth turned back, and harrow his grain when it is about one inch above the ground, he will help to hold the moisture in the soil, and he will also kill many of the weeds already started. This harrowing will set the teeth turned back will not hurt the grain, in fact, it will do it good.

"Harrowing of the grain can be carefully carried on until the grain has grown to three inches in height. This harrowing of grain after seeding, and as it is coming through the soil, should come to be a common practice, and it is urgently recommended. Do not, however, use spike-tooth harrow unless the teeth can be slanted back.

"This harrowing, as recommended above, is very necessary should our growing season happens to be a dry one. If the supply of moisture during the entire growing season it will also be helpful, and the beneficial results will be very noticeable in fields a dry or wet season. Do not wait, but do this harrowing of the grain now."

FINE FOR THE GRAINS

More Favorable Weather for Small Grain Could Not be Desired.

Though people go about all humped up and complain of the cold, more favorable weather for the early seeding of small grain could not be desired. There is "growing weather" in fine shape and is getting a better start than if more heat and moisture prevailed in place of straw.

Crop prospects are very favorable for the beginning of the season.

WARMING UP FOR THE 1914 RACE

EARLY ACTIVITY SHOWN BY CANDIDATES FOR STATE OFFICES.

(Special Correspondence.)

St. Paul, May 14—With a weary three days' session of legislation just ended and congress pounding away at the tariff in a manner that keeps everybody awake and sweating, it would seem as if the people were entitled to a rest, for a brief period at least, but there is no such luck in store for the overworked voter and taxpayer. Ye politicos never sleep. Already several aspirants to the governor Eberhart's job are busy and others are looking the ground on the elective list for the 1914 campaign are in the making. This early activity in a row of political sentiment which will not be passed upon until September, 1914, would seem somewhat far fetched, still it is on. If you do not believe it just ask close friends of Jim Peterson, the Minneapolis Progressive; W. E. Lee of Long Prairie, Todd county banker, who was second best in the primary run a year ago, and L. G. Spooner of Morris, who, following a turn down for the gubernatorial nomination, turned his attention to the legislature and landed a third term in the house. E. T. Young of St. Paul, who also ran, might be able to throw some light on the early activity, but probably not from the standpoint of a prospective candidate. Like Sam Gordon, the Browns Valley editor, the former attorney general has probably had enough of it, though both are interested. Then, too, if further doubt exists you might write or ask Henry Rines, speaker of the late house, who is credited with designs on the state auditorship; S. G. Iverson, the present state auditor, who is divided on the question of whether his future spells governor or something else; Congressman James Manahan, whose Joseph's coat has the Ribbon of movement beat a mile for cheaplable hues, and State Senator Johnson of Chisago county, who is sure to be a congressional candidate in the now Tenth. This is a formidable list and in itself should dispel all doubts as to that activity which now exists.

The one sure thing in a Republican prospective gubernatorial candidate is James A. Peterson of Minneapolis—but on it if you want to—and if anything is wanting in the way of confirmation it can be found in a quiet message to several political uplift organizations which met recently in Minneapolis and St. Paul to look over the gubernatorial field that he would be on the job at the proper time. These several political uplift organizations are opposed to Governor Eberhart's announced intention to call a special session of the legislature for the purpose of passing a public utilities commission act and for your benefit, dear reader, Jim is with them on the proposition. He, too, has suddenly decided that statewide control of public utilities is wrong, though his past views are said to be to the contrary. Jim in the old days ran with the machine; he was one of the staunchest friends R. C. Dunn had in the memorable campaign of 1906. Two years ago he joined the La Follette forces and with George Loftus and Jim Meagher went the limit for the Little Napoleon of Wisconsin. Jim, however, was missing when the Little Wizard attempted to call a conference of his Minnesota backers some weeks ago and is now said to be flirting with other gods of the third party kind. If this information will help any I will say that Jim is rich. The size of his bank account is not posted on the dead walls, but it is reported to be considerable. He is not a liberal cuss, though, as I get it.

The natural question is, does not this early activity alarm Governor

BOND ELECTION WILL BE HELD

TO VOTE ON PROPOSITION TO BOND FOR NEW SCHOOL BUILDING.

The special election to vote on the proposition to issue and negotiate bonds to secure a fund with which to construct a modern public school building in Red Lake Falls will be held Friday, June 6.

It is proposed to issue bonds in the sum of $16,000, the bonds to bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent and to be sold to the state of Minnesota.

The proceeds from the sale of the bonds and the money paid by the insurance companies on policies carried on the building destroyed by fire a few weeks ago will provide the fund for the construction of the new building.

There is no reason why there should be any opposition and there probably will be none.

MRS. LUCY BENOIT.

Wife of Charles Benoit Passed Away Monday.

Mrs. Lucy Benoit, wife of Charles Benoit, passed away at her home in this city at 6:30 o'clock Monday afternoon, May 19. Death was due to Bright's disease from which Mrs. Benoit has been a sufferer for several months.

Mrs. Benoit was seventy-seven years old and had been a resident of Red Lake county for many years. She was born in St. Thomas, Canada, in 1836, her maiden name being Lucy Flores. In 1858 she and Mr. Benoit were married and they went to Wilno, Canada, to reside, and lived there until 1880. At that time they moved to Springfield, Minn. In 1884 they came to Red Lake county and settled on a farm near Brooks. Ten years ago they came to this city and had resided here since.

Mrs. Benoit is survived by her husband and four children, two children having died several years ago. The children living are Nels Benoit, Joseph Benoit and Mrs. John Mayhew of this city and Mrs. Alphonse Parrada of North Yakima, Wash.

The funeral was held Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock at St. Joseph's church, Rev. Fr. Beyne officiating and interment was at the church cemetary east of the city.

BACCALAUREATE SERMON.

By Fr. Beyne at St. Joseph's Church Sunday Evening.

The baccalaureate sermon for the class of 1913 of the Red Lake Falls high school is to be delivered by Rev. Fr. Beyne. The sermon will be given at St. Joseph's church at 8 o'clock Sunday evening.

BLANKED ANOTHER.

Local Team Defeated Mentor by a 2 to 0 Score.

The ball game played on the local grounds Sunday afternoon between the Red Lake Falls and Mentor teams was an interesting and well-played contest. Keitzenheim was on the mound for the locals and he had 'em all working for him. The visitors were unable to do anything with the stick and very few drives got past the base lines. Though the locals hit more freely there seemed to be some one stalking around to get the ball usually. Excellent support by the short field for the visitors kept the score down. Both teams gave the pitchers good support which kept the score low and close.

The locals pushed two scores over during the nine innings of play, but the visitors did not get into the scoring.

That Keitzenheim had the Mentor fellows swinging wildly is indicated by the fact that only three Mentor men reached first base and one second and that he struck out 21 men.

The exercises will be held at the court house, in the court room.

THE HAPPIEST BOY

H. M. Kaus Got Two Big Sturgeon in Hand to Hand Encounter.

Fishin's fine and the boys, old and young and sparkle with the spirits of their lives. Not for several years have so many fish been taken from the Red Lake river as this season opened the first of the month and on any time of the day many fishermen may be seen on the banks of the river.

To date H. M. Kaus has made the big catch. He was fishing near the "county bridge" Saturday night when he observed wind locked like a whale spouting. He picked up a pole approached cautiously. The whale was a big sturgeon stranded in the shallow water of the rapids and the big fish was making the water fly by whipping it with his tail. He showed fight so he and Mr. Kaus engaged in a "hand to hand" encounter. One of the fish's companions came to his rescue, but Mr. Kaus was the "best man" and got both of the fish. They were big fellows, one of them weighing more than fifty pounds and the other more than seventy pounds.

During the week several other people have landed big sturgeon.

CONVICT JOHNSON ON SEVEN COUNTS

BIG BLACK PUGILIST HELD GUILTY FOR MANN LAW VIOLATION.

PENALTY IS NOT YET FIXED

Maximum is Five Years or $10,000 Fine, or Both—Appeal for New Trial Set For May 29.

Chicago, May 11. — Jack Johnson, champion heavyweight prizefighter, has been found guilty of violating the Mann law in transporting Belle Schreiber from Pittsburg to Chicago in 1910. He was convicted on all seven counts in the indictment. The jury returned its verdict after an hour's consideration.

Maximum Penalty.

The maximum penalty under the finding is five years imprisonment or $10,000 fine, or both.

A motion of Assistant District Attorney Henry Parkin that Johnson be ordered confined in the county jail was overruled by Judge Carpenter and the negro was released on a bond of $10,000. A motion for a new trial was filed at once by counsel for Johnson and arguments on the motion were set for May 29.

Johnson was charged with having furnished Miss Schreiber with $75 with which to come from Pittsburg to Chicago. Miss Schreiber testified that on her arrival here, Johnson had furnished a flat which she had said had been devoted to immoral purposes. She also described trips around the country which she said had been made with the prizefighter out at his expense.

Before First Marriage.

This was in 1910, just before the marriage of Johnson to Etta Duryea, the divorced wife of an eastern horseman. She shot herself to death eight months later, presumably after another brooding over her social downfall and her neglect.

Two months later Johnson was arrested by the Chicago police on the charge of having abducted Lucille Cameron, the 18-year-old daughter of Mrs. Clarence of Minneapolis, who had been employed as cashier at Johnson's restaurant. These charges were dropped and Johnson and Lucille Cameron girl were married.

It was during the police investigation of Johnson's affair with the Minneapolis girl that facts were unearthed which resulted in the prizefighter's indictment by a federal grand jury in connection with the Schreiber woman.

Four Ballots Taken.

Four ballots were taken by the jury, the first ballot being four for acquittal and eight for conviction. James Bruce, a grain dealer of Marseilles, Ill., was foreman of the jury.

Two counts of the indictment were dismissed Monday at the request of Judge Carpenter, who declared that on good purposes could be served by either the testimony details of the relations of Johnson and the woman, Lucille Cameron Johnson. His present wife, did not appear in the court room on any time during the week, his attorneys fearing the effect of her presence. Instead, Mrs. Tiny Johnson, the negro's mother, sat constantly at his side. Only a few persons were in court when the verdict was read, as a result of an order of Judge Carpenter that "sensation" be barred from the hearings.

Senile Comes Off.

The suggestion of Johnson's "Gold-en Rule" policy, which had been on his lips during the trial of Jack Curry on illegalities, faded when the clerk pronounced the word "guilty." Johnson sat solemnly in his seat until Attorney Parkin's motion that the fighter be taken into custody was denied, when he slipped quietly from his seat and made his way from the court room alone.

PEACE CELEBRATION PLANS

OUTLINE SCHEME FOR PROMOTING GOOD FEELING.

All Nations to Be Invited to Share in Treaty of Ghent Celebration.

Washington, May 14.—The international peace delegates who are perfecting plans for the celebration of the 100th anniversary of the signing of the Treaty of Ghent end of peace among English-speaking peoples in December next year, came to Washington and called upon President Wilson, Secretary Bryan and other officers of the government. The delegates later attended a banquet at which speeches were made by leaders in the peace movement and the proposed celebration.

The delegates called upon Secretary Bryan immediately after their arrival and were received by him in his office in the state department.

A statement outlining the proposed plan for the celebration in all English-speaking countries of the peace centenary was made public by Andrew Carnegie, secretary of the American committee. This will be submitted to the respective governments with the request that it be approved and aid in carrying it out be given. The central feature of the plan is the creation of suitable monuments in American and European capitals of peaceful dependencies identical in design and bearing an identical inscription. It is proposed that the foundation stones be laid by the king of England and president of the United States and by their representatives in the colonial possessions. While this is in progress it is proposed that all work in both countries cease for five minutes. All nations are to be invited to send representatives to take part in the ceremonies.

As a method for promoting peaceful sentiments in all classes it is proposed there be established in universities of both countries chairs of British-American history, with provision for the interchange of professors. There also are to be established traveling fellowships for the study of history.

Stillwell, Exonerated by New York Senate, Is Indicted.

Kendall, president of the New York Bank Note company, on which charges he was exonerated by the state senate after a hearing at Albany, has surrendered to the office of District Attorney Whitman.

His was immediately taken before Justice Seabury and informed the court that his failure to appear earlier in the day was occasioned by the illness of his counsel, State Senator McClelland. Attorney J. B. Wilson, temporarily retained by the indicted senator, requested and was granted an adjournment in pleading. Bail in $5,000 was furnished by Stillwell.

District Attorney Whitman indicated that the indictment will be brought up on trial within the next week or ten days.

CALIFORNIA ENACTS VERY RADICAL LAWS

LEGISLATURE ADJOURNS AFTER CARRYING OUT POLICIES OF JOHNSON.

VICTORY FOR PROGRESSIVES

Summary of Legislative Measures Shows That Administration's Program Was Carried Out in Almost Every Detail.

Sacramento, Cal., May 13.—The fortieth California legislature adjourned yesterday with a practically unbroken record of victory for the progressive majority in the opening of the administration policies outlined by Governor Hiram W. Johnson.

Alien Bill Excepted.

The much-discussed anti-alien land-holding bill which has become the subject of an international controversy, can hardly be listed among these, for while it had its inception in the majority side of the legislature, all parties were united in their desire for a law that would restrict the tenure of farm property by Japanese. The so-called administrative program may be summarized briefly as follows:

Workmen's compensation act, which creates a state insurance fund.

Mother's pension fund, establishing a fund for the benefit of orphans.

Rural credits act, providing for a state governor's signature is the red light system to study European systems.

Anti-trust laws to be enacted.

State water commission, controlling power and irrigation supplies.

A Red Light Law.

One of the most radical measures which has passed and received the governor's signature is the red light abatement law, which will be submitted to the people in a referendum election shortly. This law places the responsibility squarely upon the property owners and provides practical confiscation of property for a year as a penalty.

Faces Ice Cream Famine.

New York, May 14.—Twenty-four ice manufacturers of Greater New York have announced that they will file application for incorporation as the Anti-trust ice company, with the idea of saving themselves from the high prices threatened for ice this summer as a result of the mild winter. The ice trust also proposes to build their own ice plants, but warn the public that before these are completed there will be an ice cream famine because of the fight.

Mayor and Governor Speak.

New York, May 14.—Mayor Gaynor of New York and Governor Eberhart of Minnesota were the principal guests of honors at the fifth annual banquet of the Swedish Chamber of Commerce in the Hotel Astor. About 200 persons attended.

Incendiary Organizers Arrive.

Dublin, May 14.—The recent outbreak of militantism is only a foretaste of the campaign, which, according to information received by the police, the suffragettes have planned to carry out in Dublin for the purpose of showing their resentment of the action of the nationalist members of parliament, whom they hold responsible for the defeat of the suffrage bill. Several expert militant firebugs are here from England for the fixed purpose of inaugurating the incendiary feature of the campaign.

Milk Case Upheld.

Washington, May 14.—The validity of the Minnesota, Wis., ordinance requiring milk brought into the city to be produced from cows subjected to the tuberculin test, was upheld by the supreme court.

Davies Place Not Contested.

Washington, May 14.—There will be no contest in the senate over the nomination of Joseph E. Davies of Madison, Wis., as commissioner of corporations.

SEEK TO UNITE REPUBLICANS

UNION OF PROGRESSIVES AND OLD PARTY EXPRESSED WISH.

National Committee Urged to Call Convention for Both Factions This Year.

Chicago, May 14.—That a uniting of the Progressive party with the Republican party to not only desired, but is actually being sought, was the gist of sentiment expressed at the close here of a two days' conference at which Republican leaders outlined plans for reorganizing the party.

Herbert S. Hadley, former governor of Missouri, who, with Senators Albert B. Cummins of Iowa, William B. Borah of Idaho and I. Y. Sherman of Illinois, led in the discussion at the conference, said afterward that the desire to have those back in the party here and to join the Progressive party was "manifest." The coalition, he added, was not to be effected by any mechanical scheme, such as the passing of resolutions by any of the factions, "but rather by a recognition of the causes in the Republican party which resulted in the separation."

The conference, attended by six United States senators, numerous members of the house of representatives, and leaders from states as distant as Massachusetts and California, resulted in the issuance of a statement. The statement expressed the belief that the Republican national committee should call a Republican national convention at as early a date as possible for the purpose of effecting radical changes in party affairs and especially in reference to the control of future national conventions.

What was considered a significant part of the statement was that which referred to "reuniting" the party.

"For it to be inferred that the Republicans who met here desire to have adherents of the Progressive party retire from the party of the Republicans!" Mr. Hadley was asked.

"Manifestly not," he replied. "The coalition is to be brought about, not by the withdrawal of anybody, but by a frank recognition by the rank and file of both parties that by remaining divided their are defeating all they both favor. All we could accomplish or try to accomplish here was to start the movement for bringing about the changes in conducting the affairs of the party which seem necessary. Those changes are to correct the evils which heve been a just cause of complaint in the past and are necessary in order that the will of the majority may control in future party councils.

"Those changes shall seek are for a new basis of representation; a recognition of the result of direct primaries, so that we shall favor that system and a different method of passing upon the credentials of delegates to conventions."

Plan Popular Government League.

Washington, May 14. — Tentative plans for the organization of the National Popular Government League, with support for progressive legislation in the several states as the object, were made at a meeting held in the office of Senator Cummins. Senators Owen, Clapp and Chamberlain and a number of members of the house were present. Another meeting will be held in the near future.

Work Begun on Committees.

Washington, May 14—Requests of the 291 Democratic members of congress for committee places have been taken up by Majority Leader Underwood, and in the majority of the ways and means committee, the committee on which he has left the task of framing a preliminary slate of the committees. Each Democrat has sent a letter stating his preferences and Mr. Underwood will classify them. They will be presented to the committee.

Vesuvius' Activity Reaches Climax.

Naples, May 15.—The activity of Mount Vesuvius which has been apparent for several days, reached a climax when part of the crater collapsed. The trumblings of the mountain could be distinctly felt. After the explosion observations showed that a funnel 250 feet deep had been formed. From

"LEAK" FOUND IN NAVY DEPARTMENT

SECRETS HAVE BEEN STOLEN AND INVESTIGATION IS BEING ASKED.

MISSING PLANS UNIMPORTANT

First Set of Blue Prints Was Taken on Night of March 4—Were Minor Designs for Warships.

Washington, May 15. — Special agents of the department of justice, officers of a militarially known detective agency and the local police have been called in by the navy department to investigate a "leak" through which during the last four months several relatively unimportant plans of ships and also minor documents have disappeared. Navy officials are inclined to minimize the importance of the issues.

Began on March 4.

The first losses were discovered on the night of March 4. Some minor structural plans of the dreadnought Pennsylvania, now building, and of torpedo ships, were among them. Dobbins, not especially secret, disappeared. Navy officials say they are not so much concerned over the importance of what already has been lost as they are to find the leak and prevent further losses.

Each battleship has several sets of plans, which are sometimes widely distributed among the bureaus and contractors. The general plan is never very much of a secret.

Statement is Issued.

The navy department has just issued this statement:

"On the night of March 4 (inauguration day), when there were a large number of people in the state, war and navy buildings, assembled to witness the inaugural fireworks, there were taken, from the office as yet unknown, from the drafting room of the bureau of steam engineering, uncompleted plans of the electric wiring of the new battleship Pennsylvania. This plan shows the general arrangement of the decks and hatches, but would be of no other value than to any one wishing to obtain naval information not generally made public.

"A short time after similar plans were missed from the same drafting room. The matter is still under investigation."

The rooms of the steam engineering bureau commanded a fine view of the fireworks, and a number of visitors were in them on the night of March 4, for the most part, these were members of the families of officials and those to whom access was permitted without a pass. The plans were ordinary blue prints, lying in the drafting table, but were large enough to make quite a conspicuous roll.

The fact that other plans for electrical wiring were missed about a week it tended to relieve the visitors from suspicion and se this was the last occasion upon which the rooms were open to others than employes, the investigation turned in their direction.

STRIKE FUNDS ARE MISSING

Master Who Probes Textile Workers' Benefits, Finds $10,000 Not Accounted for—Case Dismissed.

Boston, Mass., May 14.—No satisfactory explanation of the disposition of $10,000 of a total of more than $56,000 subscribed for the benefit of the strikers' families and their funeral after quelling the textile strike at Lawrence a year ago, has been made, according to the finding of Whitfield S. Bosson, master, investigated the strike expenditures. Bosson filed his report with the supreme court.

Joseph Ettor, secretary of the committee to solicit funds for the strikers, deposited $10,000 in his own name in the Lawrence Trust company and later drew checks for $2,500 to Vincent St. John of Chicago, secretary of the Industrial Workers of the World, and $7,500 to Joseph Ettor, a textile worker of Providence, and $5,000 to Bruno Ettor of Lawrence. It is reported that these statements were returned to the strikers' fund, but Bosson finds that the money was not returned.

Two Boys Break Jail.

Springfield, Mo., May 14. — Harry Dishman and Louis Johnson, each 16 years old, escaped Monday by 20 and 15 years respectively in the state penitentiary for the slaying last November of Calvin Higgs, a negro, broke jail and escaped. They escaped by picking the lock of the door to the boys' department.

Frog Skin on Man's Back.

Ames, Iowa, May 14.—W. A. Speck, a farmer living near Ames, who was operated upon in a Des Moines hospital a year ago for the removal of a five-pound tumerous growth on his back, has removed the coating, after the operation Mr. Speck was taken to the home in this county, where he and J. E. Adamson of Ames grafted frog skins over the wound, which was so large that no human tissue could never have covered the space. The amphibian soldered to the carrying human blood and doing well.

Arizona Wants a New Treaty.

Phoenix, Ariz., May 14.—A memorial to congress has been introduced in the senate asking that steps be taken to abrogate the present treaty between the United States and Japan and negotiate a new one which will permit each state to enact its own alien land laws. The senate approved the anti-alien land bill passed by the house and it now goes to the governor. The proposed law prevents an alien who has not declared citizenship in-heritina from owning real estate or leasing it for more than five years.

FLOWERS OF THE RIVIERA

Blooms Appear Everywhere; Over Each Doorway Every Balcony, Covering Up Old Ruins.

Rome.—Not only does the Riviera display an endless variety of rich foliage, but an enormous profusion of flowers, says William Scott in Riviera. Flowers are everywhere in formal beds, in obedient lines of ranged hues, in carpeted glastarn, in masses, wreaths, and sprays. They appear in every possible corner, over each doorway, on every balcony; clambering here, hanging there, covering the nakedness of ruins and garlanding the beauty of architectural lines with a riotous joy of color and bloom. So the dear old-fashioned flowers of home, the stocks, gilly-flowers, geraniums, violets, carnations (and such carnations—double as a rose and finely frilled, the its oleander, the mimosa, the lilac, the gigantic aloe (out of whose leaves rope is now made), the yellow cassia and many, many more.

Beautiful Spot of the Riviera.

But the undisputed queen of flowers, the rose, beloved alike of gods and men, is everywhere pre-eminent. * * *

Among the ancient Greeks, we are told, the rose was also the emblem of silence and beauty. And what an eloquent silence that is, in the matter of sweet thoughts, too sweet for words; how the white memories of love's kisses in the moonlight, the warm golden raptures of hot noons to southern summer days, the blood red hues of passion in the pomegranate shade, that can never be rescued. Of all these, by his thousand varying shades and colors, the Queen Rose reminds us, and of the beauty that has smiled upon our path. We have the tiny rosebud darling nestled in the mother's arms; the child loveliness in its robes of snowy white; the pale blush rose of a young girl's cheek at the earliest thought of love; the shyly opening petals as the sun's first kisses more than warm her; yet glad and golden yielding of passion's warm embraces; the red, reckless rapture of its full fruition; the stately beauty of fair form and perfect outline; and not least, for some of us—the faded rose leaves cherished from a past that is now precious, that we can never die.

In the festivals of pagan Rome the rose had an honored place. Chaplets, crowns and garlands were thickly strewn with rose leaves, and rose garlands crowned the statues of the gods. Even in these days of so many harsh judgments have been recorded, and at least one instance of a rose feast—he loved roses. It is said that he spent enormous sums on their cultivation.

The flower markets of the Riviera are never to be found in Rome. We must include not merely those where cosmetics of the rose are made, also, or armlets, for their rooms, but the public wholesale markets held in the chill winter dawns while the visitors are yet asleep, where dealers buy the fair blossoms still dripping from the dark pools them off by vanloads to Germany, Austria, or Russia. The making of baskets for this business of exportation is a flourishing industry in many districts are often delayed on account of the large number of packages to be loaded.

MUST LIVE IN THE STATE

Gotham Passes Ordinance Aimed at City Employes Living in Jersey and Connecticut.

New York.—Several hundred persons on New York's pay roll who live in New Jersey and Connecticut are alarmed with a fear that they will either have to move or lose their jobs. An ordinance requiring that all persons employed by the city of New York must live in the New York state was passed by the board of aldermen. It was predicted that Mayor Gaynor would veto it, but it had the necessary two-thirds vote which would pass it over his veto. Many Manhattanites employes would be affected, but the greatest would be school teachers and stenographers.

Incidentally Davis, who has an auto machine shop in Manhattan, had to consult a memorandum book when asked the number of their children. After looking it up he said "nine."

LIEUTENANT PAUL GRAETZ ==MAN OF GRIT

By W. ROBERT FORAN

(Copyright, by Bilderer Co.)

TWO years ago, or a little more, all Europe was electrified by the news that Africa had been traversed by Lieut. Paul Graetz of the German army in an automobile. His thrilling adventures on this daring and plucky expedition are of too recent occurrence to have been entirely forgotten.

To have crossed Africa in an automobile is no mean feat, when one remembers that there are no roads and no repair or gasoline supply stores en route. The Cape-to-Cairo railway—that great dream of a truly great empire builder, Cecil Rhodes—is fast nearing completion; and in a year, or perhaps a little more, travelers may journey in luxurious comfort by train and steamer from Cape Town to Alexandria. They who do this will be able then to realize to the fullest possible extent what the pioneers of travel in the African hinterland had to contend with.

One would think that to bring to a successful termination such a fantastic feat as that which Lieutenant Graetz set himself in his famous African automobile expedition would be sufficient to satisfy even the most adventurous appetite for adventure. Yet it is typical of Lieutenant Graetz that he should not rest content with this one truly great achievement.

His project, undertaken on behalf of the African World, was to crown the great and practically unknown regions of Central Africa from the Indian to the Atlantic ocean, by way of the Zambesi river, Lake Bangweolo, and the Congo river. However, not by automobile this time, but by motor boat. This offered something unique in the way of African travel! It meant hardships and disappointments innumerable, but what of that!

He mapped out a route that would take him from Quilimane, the port on the coast of Portuguese East Africa to the mysterious Lake Bangweolo, by way of the River Quesqo, Leseyondin, River Shire, Port Herald, Chicuana, Fort Johnston, Lake Nyassa, Karonga, and then across the watershed to Fife. The motor-boat was specially prepared for this part of the journey, being fitted with wheels for use on land.

From Fife he decided to travel by way of the Chambesi river, Kabinga, and then arrive at the shores of the small inland sea, Lake Bangweolo, upon which so white man had ever sailed. After spending some time exploring this unknown water and collecting specimens of aquatic and land life, Graetz planned to push on to the Atlantic by way of the Lunguia, Lake Mero, Paulo, Kesengo, Lukongoleo, Kiambi, Stanleyville, Coquilhatville, Tumbi and Leopoldville, and then to the mouth of the Congo.

Take up a map of Africa and trace out this route for yourself, and you may realize in part what this stupendous journey of six thousand miles, all following for the necessarily tortuous route to be taken, meant to that valiant Graetz and his companion, the French cinematograph operator, Monsieur Octave Fiore.

Graetz had heard of the mighty Lake Bangweolo from the Awemba tribe. It had a sinister reputation among the natives of the resident lake near and far from its shores. The Awemba people told him that their people was studded with islands, on which were to be found colossal elephants and gigantic giraffes, while on its waters swam huge sea-serpents and other strange monstrous. From the surface of the lake hot springs rose and fell like fountains in the air; and pestilential winds, sweeping across the reedy marshes, carried death to all living beings.

No health resort this; rather Dante's Inferno. No native venture ing upon its waters in their frail, hollowed-out shaped canoes had ever returned. It was regarded by even tribes as a sort of Hades, where departed souls suffered continually the most dreadful torments; while others again boasted that it was the approach to Paradise, where the spirits of their dead relatives enjoyed perfect life under the protection of their gods.

It was known to be surrounded by thick and impenetrable rushes, making its exploration a matter of great difficulty. The great price which Graetz hoped to secure, in addition to being the first explorer of this wonderful lake set deep in the heart of the wilds of Africa, was specimens of one a species of gigantic buffalo, which were commonly believed by the native tribes to make their home on the shores of the lake. They were known to be unusually fierce and dangerous, but this did not deter Graetz and his plucky companion from their determined quest after them.

Lieutenant Graetz left Berlin on February 23, 1911, accompanied by Fiore and his motor-launch, the Barotsi. Khedovoff II was directly made at Quilimane for their plunge into the wilderness.

At last all was ready for the start and the two explorers set forth on their adventurous journey. Miles by mile they made their way up the Quesqo, Shire, and so to Lake Nyassa. We will pass lightly over this section of the great journey, for it was similar to many another African trip by boat on river and lake. But once they had reached Karonga their real difficulties commenced. The motor-launch had to be pushed on its wheels across the watershed by the specially fitted Steinway road—which is no road at all in the generally accepted meaning of the word—to Fife and thence to the Chambesi river, so that the Lake Bangweolo might eventually be reached. Where mechanicians impeded progress—and there were countless numbers of such places—they had to be overcome. Trees had to be felled, streams bridged, hills climbed, and bush cleared from the self-made path.

After days and days of toil in terrific tropical heat, the voyagers stepped on the banks of the Chambesi river and again took to table water to cool. This part of the trip was full of dangers, unexpected and entirely impossible to guard against.

All went well with them until they had nearly reached the shores of the mysterious Lake Bangweolo. Their disaster, dire and dreadful, overtook them in the tropical heat, and a heavy rain downpour. Miss

Merchant? Is he not somewhat concerned as to the future? On the word of his private secretary, George F. Authier, and George, who is now close enough to the throne to know, says his excellency sleeps better than ever. His principal concern is the public attitude manner which he has started to put across and he is working twelve hours a day in an effort to get the best in this particular line for Minnesota. His possible entry into the field for a third term at the gubernatorial game is just now the least of his troubles. That his excellency is going to be a candidate for a third term is certain. Mr. Authier is too old a friend at the game to even attempt to shroud the fact with doubt—and what is more the prospects are good for a realization of his ambitions. Of course the unexpected may happen; nothing is sure in politics. Governor Rhodart has enemies, lots of them, and there are persons who without malice discuss his administration as one dictated by outside influence, but laying aside all that he has grown in popularity with the people and more so with his own nationality, and that counts for much. Then there is the primary law, which is none too best. But why discuss it any further. As I said, the people are tired of politics.

+ + +

While states are in the making on the Republican side of the house there is not a whisper from the rocks of the Democracy. The unwashed seem to have crowded into their holes and pulled the holes after them. The last time Solomon Frank A. Day was heard from it was in the shape of an article in his official organ, the Pennant Sentinel. In which he picked Governor Eberhart to win the nomination again. Frank has had his eye on a federal job, which so far has failed to materialize. Another of the silent ones is National Committeeman Lynch, though his absence might be taken on the ground that he does not want to know too much at this time. Mr. Lynch, you know, is supposed to be the dispenser of Wilson patronage in Minnesota.

+ + +

State Senator Victor L. Johnson of Center City, who is a leader in the progressive movement, is here without wisdom in the argument advanced by him. He says the people of this state have become in power a united front on the part of the "regulars" can alone dislodge them and this means that the Republican party must handle the job. No third party movement can do it better, he says, will go like others of the kind in the past.

+ + +

The third party movement is without strong foothold in Minnesota. Its forces are badly scattered and unfortunately for it its leaders are out of the kind to inspire the confidence of the voters. James Manahan, who was elected congressman at large, evidently was aware of its weakness in this respect and the first thing he did on arriving in Washington was to take on the old Republican party. He wanted to be understood as still a progressive, but as a third party man. Whether the third party movement is passing or not, as Senator Johnson says, it has been good, for it has shown Republican leaders that the rank and square the weak spots in their ranks, purged the body politic of a lot of leeches that have been diseased long ago and purified the atmosphere generally. That the movement has not been without its good features.

+ + +

Don C. Cameron, county attorney at Little Falls, has raised the point that the legislature in the legislation by giving county officers a four-year term is unconstitutional and there seems to be merit in his contention. Cameron's former Generl Smith has ruled the other way. Dr. Cameron, as I get his point, holds that the constitution has been violated by the legislature and that held biennially, but Mr. Smith, in his answer, says that while this is true the constitution does not fix the length of the term of office of those selected at such general elections.

+ + +

Within the next three months the state commission will put in the sale of state lands $20,000, a sum appropriated by the last legislature for the purpose of building school courses. They will be held at the county seats of counties and the members of the faculties will be the structors. This will mean extra money for them.

+ + +

The state tax commission has put up to the state land department the question of whether or not the auditor under law of 1911 insurance policies are taxable as credits. If the answer is in the affirmative it will mean a heavy addition to the taxable value of the state.

+ + +

When the late legislature passed a law regulating the sale of cigarettes under certain restrictions and put the enforcement of the law up to the state board of control it established a precedent that may prove highly important one day. It took from the local authorities the control of a considered necessary evil and placed it in the hands of a central body. What if the enforcement of the liquor laws, together with the issuance of licenses, were so centralized. No prospective administration that I know of is hankering for such an innovation, but it might come in time.

The new State Historical society building, for which $500,000 was appropriated by the legislature, is to be located on Hamline grades. The rotunda has secured the block on which the old Governor Merriam home stood, the state capitol was located. In the early days it was the scene of many social successes and more than one political row was housed within its hospitable walls.

Attorney General Smith's warning to the motter of a threatened raid on the various county treasuries because of lack of knowledge of the requirements of the so called mothers' pension law will be heeded. Many in Hennepin county alone out of 150 applications for aid under the law only three have been granted.

THE COUNTY CHAIRMAN.

A NEW REMEDY

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

When I graduated from the medical college I secured the position of house surgeon at a hospital. I had not been there long when a man was brought in who had fallen from a scaffold. He was dying and I told those who brought him here that nothing could be done for him. His brother was on the outside and scampered for a physician, Dr. Blackwell, who stood very high in the profession, to come right over. He went to work on the patient as soon as he arrived and succeeded in prolonging the life of the latter for an hour. It struck me that he would have better let the man die at once instead of prolonging the agony.

These connected with the deal may be considered of me to the doctor, and before he departed he said to me privately:

"Young man, never give up a patient until he is dead. When you have tried every remedy applicable to the case try something that is not applicable—hot water, cold water, mustard, alcohol, anything—to persuade him to believe that you have not given up hope. Such a course may carry him over the bar and bring him into a snug harbor."

I remembered Dr. Blackwell's advice. We practiced in the same town and occasionally ran across each other, though he had a practice much superior to mine. However, I met a young lady whom I wished to make my wife, a Miss Helen Stanford, and, although I was not very well in my own profession, I was so deeply in love that I was not inclined to wait. Her father was of a different opinion. He positively forbade the match—at least, until I could earn a practice of $5,000 a year.

I was in despair, for the best I could scrape together was $2,000 a year, and I felt sure that ten years would be required to reach the goal. If I approached it. Helen loved me, but was fearful that if she married me she would be a drag on me instead of a helpmeet. So she decided with her father.

One evening, about a year after I had been turned down, there came a sharp ring at my telephone, and on taking up the receiver I heard Helen's voice.

"Oh, Paul, do come at once. Father has got a fishbone in his throat and is strangling desperately to get it out."

"I'll go right away," I said, and, dropping the receiver, ran out to my buggy that was standing at the door and drove sondly to their house.

On reaching there I found Mr. Stanford frightened out of his wits. He was literally choking to death. I directed the family to send for another doctor—Blackwell, if they could get him—and then I went to work with every device I could think of to get out the fishbone. Nowadays they resort to tracheotomy—that is, cutting a hole in the windpipe through which the patient can breathe—but at that time I objected it then I was not up to it. I thrust hooked instruments down the throat, but somehow I could get a purchase on the bone. Under my directions the family were engaged in most getting more frightened and finally I got into a condition that I could not get at his throat.

Mens while messengers were running hither and thither to get another doctor, with no luck in finding one. Then the widow Blackwell had given me about never giving up hope with a patient till he was dead occurred to me and, since I could not think of another, direct remedy in the case of Mr. Stanford, I decided to apply to get out the fishbone. Nowadays they resort to tracheotomy—that is, cutting a hole in the windpipe through which the patient can breathe—but at that time I objected it then I was not up to it. I thrust hooked instruments down the throat, but somehow I could get a purchase on the bone. The people in charge of the program given by St. Joseph's school desire to express their thanks to the members of the Red Lake Falls Orchestra and others who assisted them with the program.

The program given by the pupils of St. Joseph's church at the Lotus theatre last Friday evening delighted a large number of people. The house was filled to capacity and the numbers on the program were given in a manner creditable to the young people and to those who had directed the preparation for the entertainment. The receipts were $97.80.

Miss Effie Leif and Mr. Fred W. M. Priebe, both of Plummer, were married in this city Tuesday. The ceremony was performed at three o'clock in the afternoon by Judge Jas. Persault at his office in the court house. The young people were accompanied to this city by Miss Ruth Lee and Mr. J. A. Brekke, who witnessed the ceremony.

The marriage of two well-known young people took place on Monday, May 15. The parties to the happy event were Miss Emma Lacourdere, daughter of Mr and Mrs. H. Lacourdere, and Mr. Phel Lizotte, son of Mr. and Mrs. Vital Lizotte. The ceremony was performed at St. Joseph's church at 8 o'clock in the morning, Rev. Fr. Beyne officiating. The bride and groom were attended by Mrs. Mary Roy and Mr. Walter Lacourdere. At noon a wedding dinner was served at the Lizotte home and Mr. and Mrs. Lizotte left on a short wedding trip. They will be at home to friends in Crookston and returned yesterday, instead of boarding the train at the Great Northern station Mr. Lizotte and his bride went to the Jostlon, hoping to avoid a too enthusiastic demonstration by their friends. However, their plans were not kept secret and they were met at the junction by a crowd of young people armed with rice and old shoes and they were "showered" in the customary way. Mr. and Mrs. Lizotte will go to housekeeping in this city.

PLUMMER

Leo Reinhart, who is employed on the Soo Line section crew, had two of his fingers badly smashed Tuesday morning, while he in company with the others in the crew were unloading ties. He was hurriedly taken to Thief River Falls on the passing speeder to have his wounds treated by the company doctor. Just how serious the outcome of his mishap will not be known for a couple of days.

Knute Steen received word the latter part of last week from his son, who was operated upon recently for appendicitis at Aberdeen, S. D., to the effect that he is recovering slowly and hopes to be up and around again soon. Mr. Steen was for a while in a serious condition and attending physicians held little hope for his recovery. His change for the better will be good news for his many friends here.—Pioneer.

LUELLA CHILSON ORHMAN,
Soprano with the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra at Thief River Falls, June 5.

Jos. Normandeau returned this week from Peoria, Illinois, where he had been for the past few months in attendance at a watch-making school.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Fletcher of Langdon, N. Dak., arrived this morning for a visit with Mr. Fletcher's parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Fletcher.

The condition of Frank Havalin has not been so favorable recently and he was taken to St. Cloud the first of the week and will be treated for a hospital in that city.

The young people of the city enjoyed an impromptu dance Wednesday evening, the concert company orchestra that was appearing here furnishing delightful music for the dance.

A. A. Lateodreare returned this morning from a business trip to western Canada. He was away for three weeks and went as far west as Edmonton.

Theo. Lamontagne this week purchased the balance of the Houston general merchandise stock. Mr. Houston having previously disposed of the clothing and dry goods. A sale of the stock is advertised.

People were awakened somewhat earlier than usual this morning by the boom of the train for Bemidji at 4:30 o'clock. Many of the passengers were "planted" in the city for the day, the game and fish commission having set it its known that they will not stand for that.

It cannot be said that rapid progress is being made with the work of laying the water mains under the bed of the Clearwater river. That is so because it is impossible to make rapid progress on the work. The bed of the river seems to be composed of heavy rocks, making digging in the kaufer dam so extremely slow and difficult task. Men have been at work on the job for several weeks and they will probably be at it as much longer a time.

SYNOPSIS.

Bill Cannon, the bonanza king, and his daughter, Mrs. Ryan, who had leased up Mrs. Cornelia Van Vleet's villa, "Casa Blanca," at Coronado Beach, arrive at Antelope, Dominick Ryan, Mrs. Ryan's husband, has left a bad record for his wife and children. The determined old lady refuses to touch Ryan's money, but Dominick, who has wrapped himself into a marriage with Berenice Lyon, a beautiful but penniless young prima donna, has appropriated the money. They have frequent quarrels, and Ryan is angered when Dominick and Berenice announce their engagement. Mrs. Ryan is somewhat mollified when Dominick promises that if you could almost hear the ticking of the watch.

Cannon sees speculating as to the identity of the likeness when he heard the silken rustling of skirts, and through the green of old French chintz Dominick is smiling, with extended hand, Philip Clay, the giver of a fascinating jewel at her neck. Her hair was dressed with a shining, smooth elaborateness, and her figure in the close and arranged over her forehead in careful curls. As she and her visitor exchanged the free sentences of greeting Cannon noticed that she looked much older and more worn than she had done the last time he had seen her, but her face was as full of expression as a living flower bed or withered leaf left on a single stalk in the garden borders. Every window-pane gleamed like a mirror innocent of dust or blemishing spot. The marble steps up which Cannon mounted were as snowily unsullied as though no foot had passed over them since their last ablution.

The door was opened by a Chinaman, who, taking the visitor's card, left him standing in the hall, and, deft to his queries as to where he should go, serenely mounted the stairs. Cannon hesitated a moment, then hearing a sound of voices to his right, entered the anteroom that gave on that suite of apartments into which Dominick had walked on the night of the ball. They were softly lit by the afternoon sun filtering through thin draperies, and extended in pale, gilt-touched vista to the shining emptiness of the ballroom. The odd man was advancing toward the voices when he suddenly saw whence they proceeded, and stopped. In the room just beyond him Cornelia Ryan and a young man were sitting on a small, complex sofa, their figures thrown out in high relief against the background of silk-covered wall. Cornelia's red head was in close proximity to that of her companion, which the intruder saw to be clothed with a thatch of sleek black hair, and which he recognized as appertaining to a young man whose face he had once been shift boss on the Roy del Monte, and who bore the portmonteau of Duffy.

Cornelia and Jack Duffy had the appearance of being completely engrossed in each others society. In his moment of unobserved survey, Cannon had time to note the young woman's air of bashful, pleased embarrassment and the gentleman's expression of that tense, unsmiling earnestness which attends the delivery of sentimental messages. Cornelia was looking down, and her flaming hair and the rosy tones of her face shading from the faintest of pearly pinks to deepening degrees of red were luminously vivid against the flat surface of cream-colored wall behind her, and beside the black coat and thin, dark cheek of her companion. That something very tender was going on was quickly seen by the visitor, who softly withdrawing, stepped gingerly over the fur rugs, and gaining the entrance to the hall with a sensation of hurried alarm.

An open door just opposite offered a refuge, and, passing through it for a forward guessing glance alert for other contingencies who might mean intrusion, the old man entered a small reception room lit by the glow of a hard coal fire. The room was different in furnishing and style from those he had left. It had the austere harmoness of aspect resultant from a combination of bare white walls and large pieces of furniture of a black wood upon which gold lines were traced in ornamental squares. An old-fashioned carpet was on the floor, and several tufted arm-chairs, bright with dangling fringes, were drawn up socially before the fire. His head bowed cheerily, a red focus of heat barred by the stripes of a grate, and surmounted by a chastely severe white marble mantelpiece, he had been in the room often before and knew it for Mrs. Ryan's own particular sanctum. When a celebrated decorator had been sent out from New York to furnish the lower floor of the house, she had insisted on retaining in this apartment pieces of furniture of the years of art which she approved, and which the decorator wished to banish to the attic. Mrs. Ryan had her way as she always did, and the first fine "scene" of furniture which she and Con had bought in the days of their early affluence, and mellow old prints also collected in the same era of their evolution, went to the decking of the room she need for her own and other set sat in.

Cannon approached the fire, and stood there looking up at the life-size portrait in oils of the late Cornelius Ryan, which hung over the chimney-piece. The artist had portrayed him as a thickly-whiskered man with the complexion of a healthy infant and pupils of baby blue. A watch chain gives him by his colleagues in the old days at Sparta, and formed of rapeseed gilt gents within native gold, was painted with a finished carefulness which had pleased Mrs. Ryan even more than the likeness had done. In showing the picture, she was wont to say proudly: "Just look at the watch chain—and see if you could almost hear the ticking of the watch."

Cannon was speculating as to the identity of the likeness when he heard the silken rustling of skirts, and through the green of old French chintz Dominick is smiling, with extended hand, Philip Clay, the giver of a fascinating jewel at her neck. Her hair was dressed with a shining, smooth elaborateness, and her figure in the close and arranged over her forehead in careful curls. BETTER MINNESOTA SCHOOLS

New Commission Will Make Thorough Study of Entire System.

St. Paul.—Possibility exists for a great and useful service to the state by the new educational commission, according to C. G. Schulz, state superintendent of education, a member of the commission. "While Minnesota has been generous in promoting public education," said Mr. Schulz, "the people are willing to pay for all forms of public school training. It is necessary to weld the several parts of our system into a more compact and harmonious administration. The means of a common school education and of at least part of a high school education, should be within the reach of every child in the state, and the opportunities both in the city and rural communities with regard to educational facilities, must be equalized.

"The commission will make a general survey of the public school situation in Minnesota, with especial reference to the normal. It will endeavor to perfect a co-ordinated

FINE WORK WITH SPLIT-LOG DRAG

J. H. WAGNER AND SAM MILLER ACCOMPLISH MOST SATISFACTORY RESULTS.

There is a piece of country road three miles long, east of town, that is in excellent condition. The road has been placed in this condition by the most simple means, the operation of the split-log drag, the work on the road being particularly done by J. H. Wagner and Sam Miller.

Some time ago some of the businesss men of the city came to with Mr. Miller and Mr. Wagner that they would supply them with a split-log drag if they would keep the road in good condition. A fine piece of country road is the result of the undertaking.

The business men stand ready to duplicate the condition. Any three or four farmers living in the country tributary to Red Lake Falls will be provided with a drag if they will agree to drag in approved manner a few miles of road.

In no manner can so much good be done to the roads with a limited amount of labor as with the proper regulation factory-made drags.

The farmers interested in the proposition will be provided with the regulation factory made drags.

HOLE-IN-THE-SKY.

And His Braves Make Killing—Sheriff Fellman Honored.

Charley Hole-in-the-Sky, an Indian, and a half a dozen of his braves, made a killing and came to town Saturday to celebrate the event. They captured eight wolves in Terrebonne township and brought them to town to claim the wealth represented by the bounty. Charley, the leader and spokesman, did not have much to say but he knew what he was after and insisted upon official escort in no less a personage than the sheriff of Red Lake county.

When Charley was armed with his warrant, the party started from the court house, Sheriff Fellman having a glass of honey bottle the leader of the band, the others following in silence at respectful distance. When the warrant had been exchanged for money at the bank the sheriff was discharged from his important duties and the red men returned to their abode in the big out doors.

HOLIDAY GAME.

Red Lake Falls and Brooks Here on May 30.

On the afternoon of Memorial Day, May 30, the second game of the season between the Brooks and Red Lake Falls teams will be played on the local grounds.

The previous game, played at Brooks, was an interesting contest, resulting in a score of 8 to 6 in favor of the locals and it is probable that the next game will be as interesting.

On the evening of the day of the game the base ball boys will give a big dance at Woodmen hall.

TWO MILES OF CEMENT WALKS

WILL BE ONE OF THE BIG IMPROVEMENTS IN THE CITY THIS SEASON.

An improvement to be made this season that will add much to the appearance of the streets and to the value of property will be the construction of two miles of cement sidewalks.

This improvement is provided for in a lengthy sidewalk resolution published in today's paper. Many blocks of the old board walks are condemned and cement sidewalks are ordered constructed according to approved plans.

The property owners will no doubt take kindly to the "suggestion", for it is probable that everybody now appreciates the economy and other advantages of having cement walks instead of the old board walks.

MEMORIAL DAY EXERCISES

WILL BE APPROPRIATE OBSERVANCE OF DAY IN RED LAKE FALLS.

Memorial Day, Friday, May 30, will be appropriately observed in Red Lake Falls with exercises commencing at 10 o'clock. The column will form at that hour and march to the court house grounds where the exercises will be held if the weather will permit.

The Red Lake Falls concert band will lead the procession and the school children will accompany the veterans on the march.

At the court house grounds there will be music by the band, the reading of Lincoln's Gettysburg address and a few short addresses.

All citizens are invited to join with the veterans in the observance of Memorial Day.

RAN AWAY WITH 'EM

Locals Defeated St. Hilaire by One-sided Score of 13 to 1.

The ball game at St. Hilaire Sunday between the locals and the St. Hilaire team resulted in a one-sided victory for Red Lake Falls, the score being 13 to 1.

The St. Hilaire fellows were unable to do anything with Keilen-beiter's benders and their shoots and were equally ineffective in their attempts to hold the locals to a low score.

SITE FOR SCHOOL HOUSE ACQUIRED

NORTHEAST CORNER OF BLOCK BOUGHT—BUILDING TO FACE NORTH.

The site for Red Lake Falls' new public school building has been definately decided upon. The northeast quarter of the block of which the old site is the west half has been purchased. That will give the district three-quarters of the block and the alley. The lots in the southeast corner may be acquired later. The additional ground was purchased from Frank Lacouraliere and Charles Benoit.

The new building will be built to face the north and about as near the center of the block as possible—that is, it will be built across what is now the alley and about as far back as possible on the ground now owned by the district.

This is no doubt a very satisfactory disposition of the matter of a site for the new building.

BROOKS HERE FRIDAY.

And Locals Will Take on Crookston Team Sunday.

The return game between the Brooks and Red Lake Falls base ball teams will be played on the local grounds on the afternoon of Memorial day, Friday, May 30. The first game, played at Brooks, was an interesting contest and indicates that Friday's game will be worth seeing.

On Sunday afternoon the locals will take on the Crookston team. The locals have not been defeated this season and the fans are looking to them to give a good account of themselves in the contest with Crookston.

OUTING FOR EDITORS

People of Bemidji Offer Alluring Program for Entertainment of Scribes.

If there is any newspaper man in northern Minnesota who will not be in Bemidji on June 13, 14 and 15, it surely will not be because he will not wish to go. The people of Bemidji are planning for the entertainment of the members of the Northern Minnesota Editorial association in a manner that is most alluring. Besides other entertaining features there will be excursions on the lake and on the Mississippi river and an excursion to Red Lake and boat trip to the Indian agency.

If the Bemidji people can get close to the weather man and keep the thermometer working as it is this afternoon their town will surely be over-run with tired and perspiring newspaper men.

The railroads are offering a rate of a fare and a third which is some inducement, especially in this day of anti-pass laws.

Free Entertainment.

We have arranged with the International Harvester Company of America to present the lecture-cinematic novel, "The Romance of the Reaper", in the Woodman hall on June 2, 1913 at 2 p. m. and 8 p. m.

This lecture is illustrated with beautiful views and motion pictures. The progress of agriculture is traced for more than 2,000 years, old and new ways of plowing and harvesting are shown, and a glimpse of the farms of the world are seen.

Admission is by ticket. All who are interested in the farm and the story of modern progress are invited to attend, and may secure free tickets by calling on Pindelsen Implement Co., Joseph Helm.

EBERHART FOR NEW YORK LAW

PRAISES THE EMPIRE STATES PUBLIC UTILITIES ACT.

(Special Correspondence.)

St. Paul, May 26.—Public utilities, and the special session which Governor Eberhart will call next fall for the consideration of statewide control of the same, is about all one hears of at the state capitol these days. The whole thing has the executive department by the ears and efforts are being made to localize other departments in the building. Governor Eberhart brought the bug with him, when he returned from New York and he has already indulged in two interviews on the subject, not to speak of several letters now looking to the promulgation of a line of publicity that will bring the subject statewide attention. His excellency spent several days in the East and when he was not addressing gatherings of note he was interviewing members of the New York public service commission and studying the utilities laws of that state. He says the New York law is a good one and he believes that it can be adapted to the needs of Minnesota. Wisconsin has a public utilities act, but he is not conversant with its workings. While in the East Governor Eberhart intended to discuss the subject with Secretary Taft and President Wilson, but his time was limited and he did not get to see them. He says they are for statewide control and legislation of this kind in their respective states. The session of the legislature will be convened probably in October, though the call may be postponed until January of next year. Many of the former members of the two legislative bodies say no October call would find them in the midst of their farm work and would inconvenience them considerably. For this reason the call may not be until later.

\+ \+ \+

It can hardly be said that the state is on fire as far as the demand for a public utilities act is concerned. In fact few of the country papers have given it any attention whatever, not to speak of an almost total disregard on the part of the voters. The fact, however, has in no wise dampened the enthusiasm of his excellency in the matter, as he is confident that when the proper publicity is sent forth the voters generally will back with him in a demand for the law. A vote of two bills covering phases of the public utilities scheme and his promises to see the whole question embodied in one act giving general state control he thinks makes the whole thing mandatory and that there can no he escape from the enactment of a public utilities law. When he returned from New York Governor Eberhart brought with him many pamphlets and books on the subject of state control of utilities and these will be compiled into a number of papers which will be given general distribution.

\+ \+ \+

State control of public utilities, which include telephone, water plants, electric light works and street car lines, is nature's own. Centralization of the subject is only a question of time, but any undue effort at this date may give the whole thing a setback that may take years to bring about a recovery. There is no getting away from one thing and that is it is the public utilities which want the law, not the people. Just now St. Paul, Minneapolis and Duluth concerns are behind it and naturally they do not want a law that will curtail their activities in the street extent. They want to get away from the existing local domains and embarrassing hinches on the part of those to control of the municipalities. As to the latter return the people are just as anxious to get away from this petty grafting, but at the same time they do not want to lose entire control. Some think that there should be at least two years' good publicity on the subject, so that everybody can become conversant with the subject. Eberhart is determined to call the Thorburn is determined to call the legislature together as soon as determined that the proposed law shall be put through. The best that I can with him is that it will be a good law and that he will not be made the victim of a flock of fandangled bills.

\+ \+ \+

St. Paul is a hotbed in the books, so authorized by the last legislature through the medium of its department of labor and statistics has proved so popular that other cities may adopt the plan. In the original Capital City department store, which was built in 1902 of St. Paul securities, disposed of its stock and it could have sold another $100,000 worth of same if it had done so. The selling of bonds over the counters is the status of another commodity brought out savings of years from many holding places. One feature of the sale was the interest paid to the investors. They numbered ten to every one share. Over in Minneapolis efforts to charge have been made to sell nearly $1,500,000 worth of bonds for the past year, but have been unable to get a bidder.

\+ \+ \+

The Capital City will lose one of its "attractions" shortly, when seven or eight years have been a fixture on its fair name will go out of business. The statement is given out that the last legislature is responsible. Chief Flanagan of the local police force has given out the fact that the problem now confronting the authorities is not to do with those driven out of the resorts. Three Minneapolis cleanup up the scene sent in its confidence the names of the girls and the residence districts and the scene is cleared in the case of St. Paul. The police and civilians, however, join in the statement that the law is a good one and they intend to see that it is enforced.

\+ \+ \+

Speaking of this particular law and its passage by the late legislature in the face of tremendous opposition from certain sources, there is a hint that there may be a test case in the first part of several when the day to vacate the law comes. There is to be a heavy slush fund now collected for the purpose of putting the statement bill out of business and the fact that members of the legislature profited as a result. The statement is made that the law is not all that is claimed all the way from $10,000 to $50,000. Whether all this is true or not I am unable to say, but just the same there is talk, and it is nasty talk at that.

\+ \+ \+

The Westlake bill providing for the licensing of the sale of cigarettes is one of the few laws passed by the last legislature which is up to those who secure a conviction for a violation of the law a part of the fine imposed. The informer gets $50 and he might love gotten more had not the legal department held that he has he did not include the license fee paid into the city or county treasury. Whoever drafted the bill protected it so as to include the fees in the event of a conviction, but the legal department says nix.

\+ \+ \+

That many kills now laws wars tampered with during the closing hours of the legislature is coming to light and it is nothing these days to see one or more persons studying the house and senate journal at the state capitol in an effort to find out how it was done. Some of the bills suddenly tampered with and for which there is no record is that relating to maximum hours of labor. As the bill it was stipulated, that telephone operators should have a eight hour day. When enrolled the figure 8 was changed to 9 by said that the bill regulating the protection of pharmacy was also tampered with.

\+ \+ \+

As soon as the state fair is out of the way St. Paul will be the scene of preliminaries for its spring election and the promise is that the campaign will be the warmest in the history of the city. St. Paul next spring will take up the commission form of government and as far as politics is concerned the whole thing resolves itself into the question of who will control, the Keller crowd, which is now "it," or R. T. O'Connor and his forces. St. Paul never took on a Republican ad ministration for more than two consecutive terms and the chances are that O'Connor will prevail. Then the new primary law is expected to help the crowd.

What say now that the reason Frank

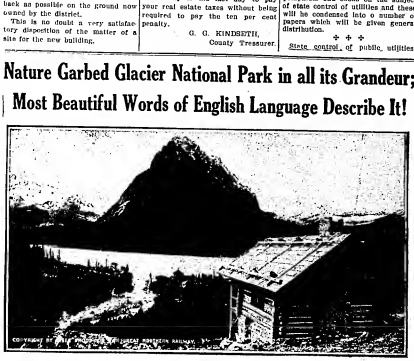
Nature Garbed Glacier National Park in all its Grandeur; Most Beautiful Words of English Language Describe It!



It takes Beautiful words to describe Beauty spots like this!

Following are the twenty-one most beautiful words of the English language, according to the judgement of the Public Speaking Club of America, a New York institution, the prize offered for this selection being awarded to James Shea, a lawyer of 416 Broadway:

MELODY.
SPLENDOR.
ADORATION.
ELOQUENCE.
VIRTUE.
INNOCENCE.
MODESTY.
FAITH.
JOY.
HONOR.
RADIANCE.

NOBILITY.
SYMPATHY.
HEAVEN.
LOVE.
DIVINE.
HOPE.
HARMONY.
HAPPINESS.
PURITY.
LIBERTY.

These words were judged according to their beauty of sound and beauty of meaning.

In culling from the inspired flights of descriptive matter written about Glacier National Park during the three years of the existence of this Rocky Mountain government preserve, there is revealed the strange coincidence that every one of these "most beautiful words of the English language" was resorted to by the score of newspaper and magazine writers who have visited the "Switzerland of America." Here are the extracts from articles on Uncle Sam's new wonderland, containing the most beautiful words the English language affords:

"The SPLENDOR of its scenery charms the senses with MELODY."

"Wild flowers grow there in MODESTY for the ADORATION of the mountain tourist."

"The ELOQUENCE of its majestic HEAVEN peaks establishes FAITH in a DIVINE power."

"The PURITY of the atmosphere and HARMONY of nature breathe LIBERTY, JOY and HAPPINESS for the work-tired trantlemer and rejuvenate thoinvalid with HOPE."

"Here, on the Roof of the Continent, VIRTUE, INNOCENCE, LOVE, HONOR and SYMPATHY are emphasized by the NOBILITY of nature's own creation."

"Marvelous RADIANCE of changing light effects from sunrise until sunset gives its 250 lakes turquoise and emerald hues."

All the rest of the beautiful words in the English language could be used and still the word picture would not be complete, artists say. Some of the best landscape painters in the country declare it is impossible even to do justice to the scenic beauty of Uncle Sam's new park. Many have tried with the brush but the ever-changing hues from light effects are not to be reproduced in the Rocky Mountain fastnesses of Northwestern Montana.

ALIEN LAND BILL HAS BECOME LAW

WITH THE SIGNING BY GOVERNOR JOHNSON MEASURE IS LEGALIZED.

NOT OPERATIVE FOR WEEKS

Meanwhile Referendum Is Sought—Theodore Bell, Progressive Democrat, Heads the Movement.

Sacramento, Cal., May 21.—California's alien land bill, which was signed Monday, is now the law of the state against the protests of Japan and the remonstrances of President Wilson and his personal envoy, Secretary of State Bryan. Ninety days after the adjournment of the legislature, on August 10, the act becomes operative.

Investigators Arrive.

While the governor was signing the bill the steamship Korea was passing through the Golden Gate, bearing two distinguished Japanese, one a former pupil of President Wilson, on a mission of investigation.

Meanwhile, suggestions, national and sectional, beset the bill. Overshadowing all is the customs of the negotiations now in progress between this country and Japan, which has interpreted the act as discriminatory and offensive.

Within California itself, the act has encountered strong hostility which may delay its activity until November 3, 1914. Democratic opponents said the legislation at this time as a matter of party regularity. Nevertheless, so far as known, there is no party issue in the bill that, after exhausting all parliamentary tactics the senate gave but one adverse Democratic vote and the assembly but two.

Bell for Referendum.

As an expression of this opposition, Theodore Bell, the Democratic candidate for governor and former chairman of the Democratic state central committee, has issued an invitation in his party to submit the issue to the people by invoking the referendum against the bill. He grounds his opposition on two considerations—that the bill is insufficiently drastic because it permits leases running three years; and, second, because it does not present it embarrasses the national administration.

The Asiatic Exclusion league, an organization of which the president is Chief A. P. Sullens, records unqualified complicity in the national dynamite plot, originating in Indianapolis, announced Sunday night that it would invoke the referendum purely because it opposes the alien land legislation.

Thirdly, the powerful Panama-Pacific international exposition company, backed by many members of commerce, has joined itself to the forces in opposition to the bill on the ground that it is a violation of faith.

Governor Johnson is standing heedlessly. Governor Johnson said, in signing the bill:

"California for the first time in its history, has an anti-alien law. Any men who have violated the law and who may consistently invoke the initiative, law and the referendum to annul the alien law will sign the referendum as to this law.

"Whatever law is sought, it may be presented by means of the initiative, and in the meantime the present law will be in operation."

REPORT ON VICE CONDITIONS

15,000 WOMEN IN NEW YORK'S UNDERWORLD

Public Dance Hall Found to Justify Worst That Has Been Said of It.

New York, May 20.—Fifteen thousand women of the underworld—a scarlet army on census has heretofore enumerated—ply their trade in one borough of greater New York alone. This is the estimate of the bureau of vice, organization of the committee of which John D. Rockefeller, Jr., is chairman, as just made public in an abstract of a forthcoming report by Raymond J. Kneeland, a special investigator, offer a palustaking inquiry into commercialized vice conditions in Manhattan, extending over a period of nearly 10 months.

The report suggests no remedies, fixes no responsibility. That phase is to be dealt with later on. It purports merely to "describe accurately vice conditions le New York city with the sole purpose of bringing out the facts." The hope is expressed that subsequently a satisfactory policy to check the evil may be worked out.

Mr. Rockefeller himself contributed the foreword to the volume. Future reports will deal with conditions in other large cities in America and with methods and their results of combating the problem in Europe. Existing preventive, reformative and rehabilitative agencies in New York are described as wholly inadequate to their tasks.

Aside from a series of chapters dealing in minute frankness with the operation of notorious resorts throughout the city, the report treats of the dance hall evil. Of the dance halls the report says:

"The public dance hall was found badly in worst that has been said of it. Of 75 dances reported on, only five were characterized by the investigators as worthy of note. Of these dances attended only by hardened profligates. Young girls, soon innocent—others, if not entirely innocent, of any such notoriety are approved, and young men not yet altogether vicious, attend the gatherings for entertainment and dancing. Many are innocent working girls, who seek legitimate recreation. The sinister element in attendance is the minority, who attend with the cold-blooded purpose of finding new subjects of debauchery and of subsequent exploitation for vice. These agents of commercialized vice are usually well-dressed, well-mannered, and introduce themselves politely and easily to strangers. They often pretend to love at first sight and exhibit marked devotion, by which the girls are easily swept off their feet and taken prey.

"The girls' frailty, ostensibly unprotectable, come in for severe condemnation at the hands of the investigators, but the investigator, the report sets forth, visited 122 real estate agents, no one of whom was found to let premises for immoral purposes.

CAUSE OF FLOODS ANNOUNCED

Army Engineers Make Early Report as Result of Investigations in Ohio.

Washington, May 21.—Artificial control of waterways by bridges, causeways and other structures, so placed as to make it impossible for floods caused by excessive rain to encompass amount of waters resulting from an unusually heavy rainfall, was blamed for the devastation wrought by the Ohio floods in the preliminary report filed by the commission of army engineers appointed by Secretary of War Garrison to investigate the floods and recommend preventive measures.

WITNESS TELLS OF DYNAMITING PLANS

DECLARES HE HAS TOLD THAT WOOD WAS BEHIND SCHEME.

DENNIS COLLINS TESTIFIES

Asserts He Believed It Intended as Hoax—Says He Received Money From Agents Already Convicted.

Boston, May 21.—Dennis J. Collins, a dog fancier of Cambridge, on trial with President William M. Wood of the American Woolen company, and Frederick R. Ateaux, a Boston dye manufacturer, for conspiracy to "plant" dynamite at Lawrence during the textile strike of 1912, testified as a witness for the prosecution when the trial was resumed.

Met Breen in Saloon.

Collins said that on May 15, 1912, he met John J. Breen, the Lawrence undertaker who was convicted of actually "planting" the explosive, in a saloon in Boston.

"Breen was waiting for two men and they later came along," Collins testified. "One of them was Mr. Rice and I am not sure about the other's name. The other man was quite a stout man. Breen told me to wait for him and he walked away, returning to them for fifteen minutes. Then they came back and I was standing and Mr. Rice handed Breen a bundle. Breen walked about a block and finally Breen laid the bundle down on the sidewalk and said to me, 'Carry that.' We went to the railroad station and Breen said to me, 'Here is a ticket. Get into the smoker and keep away from me on the train.' He then put the bundle up to Lawrence and we rode to his undertaking place in a carriage. I still had the bundle, which weighed about forty pounds.

Called Dynamite "Juice."

"I went with Mr. Breen upstairs to his bedroom, which was above the store," continued Collins. "I took the bundle up with me and laid it on the bed and opened it. I asked Breen what it was. He said it was juice.

"What did you understand by juice?" he was asked.

"Well, I didn't quite know," the witness replied. "He didn't say. All he said was, 'Wait until you see the jobs tomorrow. There's nothing to it. Thus he took some caps out of his pocket and gave them to me. He told me to divide up the sticks into half a dozen bundles and he gave me a lot of odd copies of newspapers to wrap them up in, which I did.

"I was still curious about what he was going to do and he said to me, 'Do you know President Wood of the American Woolen company?'

"I told him I did not, and he said, 'Well, never mind, it'll be a good joke, anyhow.'"

"How often was Mr. Wood's name mentioned?

"Once or twice, but only when Breen asked me if I knew him."

MEXICANS STEAL AEROPLANE

WAR CRAFT RECENTLY CONFISCATED BY U.S. OFFICIALS GONE.

Machine Carried Away in Sections in Automobiles—High Power Bombs Also Taken.

Nogales, Ariz., May 21.—The war aeroplane that crossed into Mexico near Naco Sunday night was the same flying machine confiscated by United States federal officials two weeks ago. The machine has disappeared from a ranch between Tucson and this point. With it disappeared Nathan Boykin, a deputy United States marshal of Tucson, who was left to guard the aerial craft.

The machine, in sections, was taken in three automobiles south to the international line and safely crossed. With it went high power bombs of the gravity contact type, which the insurgents expect to drop on the federal gunboat Guerrero, which lies in Guaymas harbor, ready to assist the garrison of the town in defending the only remaining point in Sonora state held by the central government. The aeroplane and the bombs for aerial war went south on a special train.

The attack on Guaymas, to which point the detailed federal force retired, has been postponed, it is expected, awaiting the completion to effect the power of the aeroplane.

The disappearance of the aeroplane, supposedly also in the keeping of the federal officers, led to a search for the missing deputy marshal. It is asserted that he was kidnaped. The Sonora mounted police, under Colonel Sonora, passed the incident with the remark, "it cost us a lot of money, but we got rid of it."

The aeroplane's three passenger 8-horsepower biplane, was held two weeks ago when Dilor Masson and his mechanic, Thomas Dennis, began setting up the machine at Palm's ranch, 20 miles below Tucson. Masson and Dennis were arrested when necessary parts of the machine and it was reported that still another aeroplane had been smuggled over the line.

Washington, May 22.—That Republican senators plan to insist upon amendments to nearly every item in the Underwood tariff bill when it comes before the senate for general discussion became evident when Senator Penrose, former chairman of the finance committee, declared that every member of the minority would have amendments to propose.

Disclaims Concerted Movement.

Senator Penrose told the senate he knew of no concerted effort to be made purposely to delay the passage of the bill, but he was assured that the minority would offer many amendments to the schedules offered by the Democrats.

Senator Smoot also announced that the introduction of amendments would begin as soon as the bill came from committee and that many roll calls would be demanded. If this plan is pursued systematically the journey of the bill through the senate will be prolonged.
